The resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas House bill 12543, to enable the people of Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico to form constitutions and State governments and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, has been under discussion in the Senate since the 10th day of December last and must fail unless voted upon at an early date:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that a date and hour prior to the 2d of March next should be fixed for a final vote upon the bill and all amendments that are pending or may be offered thereto.

STATEHOOD BILL.

Mr. PETTUS. I ask leave to have presently considered House bill 16915, for the building of a bridge.

Mr. QUAY. I feel it to be my duty, for the present, to object to the bill the consideration of which is asked by the Senator from Alabama. I will withdraw the objection, I will say to the Senator from Alabama, in a few moments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. QUAY. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of what is known as the omnibus statehood bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate.

Mr. QUAY. Now I withdraw my objection to the request of the Senator from Alabama.

CONECUH RIVER BRIDGE, IN ALABAMA.

Mr. PETTUS. I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16915) authorizing the commissioners' court of Escambia County, Ala., to construct a bridge across Conecuh River at or near a point known as McGowans Ferry, in said county and State.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES JONES.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I ask the indulgence of the Senate while I request unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12508) granting an increase of pension to James Jones. There are some reasons why, if I could explain them, it is necessary that the bill should be passed.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 6, after the word "late," to insert "first lieutenant and;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James Jones, late first lieutenant and quartermaster, Sixty-sixth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read the third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, I feel it to be my duty to object to the consideration of any other bill. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] is anxious to proceed to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. QUAY. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. STEWART. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside so that the Senate may proceed to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 15804) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

Mr. STEWART. I ask that the bill may be read for action on the amendments in the first instance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada asks that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments shall first receive consideration. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment of the Committtee on Indian Affairs was, under the head of "Current and Contingent Expenses," on page 1, line 12, to reduce the number of agents of Indian affairs from 37 to 27.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 4, to strike out:

At the Cheyenne and Arapahoe Agency, Okla., $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading was continued to line 12 on page 2.

Mr. STEWART. I wish to move a formal amendment in line 12. Before the word "hundred," I move to strike out "five" and insert "six," so as to make the clause read:

At the Crow Creek Agency, S. Dak., $1,600.

The "five" is a mistake.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 2, after line 20, to strike out:

At the Fort Berthold Agency, N. Dak., $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 4, to strike out:

At the Kiowa Agency, Okla., $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 6, to strike out:

At the Klamath Agency, Oreg., $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 15, before the word "Agency," to strike out "Mission Tulle" and insert "Mission-Tule;" so as to make the clause read:

At the Mission-Tule Agency, Cal., $1,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 4, to strike out:

At the Ponca, Pawnee, Otoe, and Oakland Agency, Okla., $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 2, to strike out:

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 12, to strike out:

At the Sisseton Agency, S. Dak., $1,500.

Mr. STEWART. The committee wishes to have lines 12 and 13 on page 4 stand. I therefore ask that the amendment be disagreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 20, to strike out:

At the Umatilla Agency, Oreg., $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 5, to strike out:

At the White Earth Agency, Minn., $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 2, to strike out:

At the Yankton, S. Dak., Agency, $1,600.

Mr. STEWART. The committee wishes to retain lines 3 and 4, and I ask that this amendment be disagreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 5, to reduce the total appropriation for current and contingent expenses at Indian agencies from $58,800 to $44,300.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The total will have to be corrected.

Mr. STEWART. It will have to be corrected to correspond with the amendments which have been made. The clerks will be allowed to do that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The clerks will make the necessary corrections in the totals.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 7, before the word

"inspection," to insert "negotiation;" so as to make the clause read:

For traveling expenses of eight Indian inspectors, at $3 per day when actually employed on duty in the field, exclusive of transportation and sleeping-car fare, in lieu of all other expenses now authorized by law, and for incidental expenses of negotiation, inspection, and investigation, including telegraphing and expenses of going to and going from the seat of government, and while remaining there under orders and direction of the Secretary of the Interior, for a period not to exceed twenty days, $12,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 15, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That when it becomes necessary to make large per capita payments to Indians, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, is hereby authorized to require any disbursing officer of the Indian Department to file a special bond in such amount as may be necessary to make such payment in one installment, the expenses incurred in procuring such special bond to be paid by the United States from this appropriation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading was continued to line 7, on page 12.

Mr. CLAPP. At this point I desire to offer an amendment, which, I understand from the chief clerk of the General Land Office, the Secretary of the Interior requests. The letter has not yet arrived.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest to the Senator from Minnesota that the Senate made an order that the committee amendments should be first considered and that the Senator withhold the amendment for the present.

Mr. CLAPP. With the consent of the chairman, this will be offered as a committee amendment.

Mr. STEWART. Before we get through with the reading of the bill the letter will probably arrive.

Mr. CLAPP. All right.

Mr. STEWART. Let it lie over until we get through with the committee amendments.

Mr. CLAPP. Very well.

CORPORATIONS IN ALASKA.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator from Nevada permit me out of order to submit a report from a committee?

Mr. STEWART. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. From the Committee on Territories I report back Senate bill 6139, which the House has passed with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, and I move that the Senate disagree to the House amendment and ask for a conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana makes a report from the Committee on Territories, which will be stated.

Mr. QUAY. I rise for information, to ask the Senator from Indiana what is the nature of this bill.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It is a bill to provide for the organization of private corporations in the district of Alaska.

Mr. QUAY. I do not recollect receiving any notice of a meeting of the committee to consider the bill.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I think perhaps that criticism is well made. It was a measure on which a subcommittee was appointed, and they drafted the bill, and it was considered very carefully and at great length at the last session. The House has simply stricken out the bill which the Senate passed and has adopted a substitute of its own. That is the state it is in. If the Senator from Pennsylvania has any objection, of course I will withdraw the report.

Mr. QUAY. I will not object. I understand very distinctly that the minority on that committee have no rights which the majority are bound to respect. I have no doubt at all that the Senator from Indiana is acting in conformity with what would have been the unanimous conclusion of the committee if a meeting had been called, but I suggest that in a case of that kind it would be proper to call the committee and submit the question to them.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I withdraw the report at the present time. In reference to the Senator saying that the minority have no rights which the majority are bound to respect, I call the Senator's attention to his own language on the floor of the Senate when he moved to discharge the committee of which he is a member; that the minority desired no further information on a very important subject; and that if that was an insult to the committee it was one which the minority condoned.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the report withdrawn?

Mr. QUAY. No; I ask the Senator not to withdraw the report.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes, I will. I prefer to do it in the regular way. If they do not get this law up there, it is not the fault of the majority of the committee.

Mr. QUAY. It is certainly not the fault of the Senator from Pennsylvania. I agree that it shall go through, as far as I am concerned.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16804) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill.

This amount to enable the President of the United States to pay the legal representatives of two deceased Kickapoo Indians, the settlement of whose estates is desired, under the provisions of section 2 of the act of August 4, 1886, such sum as may be the proportion of the $100,000 provided for said tribe for education and other beneficial purposes, per treaty of May 18, 1854, not exceeding $337.83 each, $675.66; in all, $4,003.38.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Spokanes," on page 23, line 13, before the word "agreement," to strike out "said;" and in the same line, after the word "agreement," to insert "with said Indians dated March 18, 1887, and ratified by act of Congress approved July 13, 1892;" so as to make the clause read:

For pay of a blacksmith and carpenter to do necessary work and to instruct the said Indians in those trades, $1,000 each, per sixth article of agreement with said Indians dated March 18, 1887, and ratified by act of Congress approved July 13, 1892, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Miscellaneous supports and gratuities," on page 25, line 6, before the word "and," to strike out "subsistence" and insert "support;" so as to make the clause read:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, line 20, after the name "Arizona," to strike out "and" and insert "or;" and in the same line, after the name "New Mexico," to insert:

Provided, That the unexpended balance for the fiscal year 1893 is hereby appropriated and made available for 1904;

So as to make the clause read:

For support and civilization of the Apache and other Indians in Arizona and New Mexico who have been or may be collected on reservations in Arizona or New Mexico: Provided, That the unexpended balance for the fiscal year 1893 is hereby appropriated and made available for 1904, $225,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, after line 2, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to pay, per capita, to the Mexican Kickapoo Indians in Oklahoma entitled thereto the sum of $33,443.82 now in the Treasury of the United States to their credit, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, in line 1, after the word "dollars," to insert:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to lease at a fair rental 20 acres of land, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the tract now occupied by the Shebits Indians, for the use of the Utah and Eastern Copper Company in the erection and operation of a smelter: Provided, however, That the consent of three-fourths of the adult male Indians is obtained therefor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Miscellaneous," on page 33, after line 21, to insert:

Hodge, or by those claiming under him, by reason of any engagement, agreement, or understanding had between him and said loyal Creek Indians.

Mr. QUARLES. I ask that that amendment relating to the Creek Indians may be passed over for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That order will be made in the absence of objection.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 35, after line 17, to insert:

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I understand by that that the allotment is in actual process now?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. And that the allotments will be made and the deeds will be ready for delivery at a time prior to the cessation of tribal relations?

Mr. STEWART. They will not be delivered until the tribal relation ceases.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It does not say so here. It says:

That the Secretary of the Interior shall furnish the principal chief with blank deeds necessary for all conveyances mentioned in the agreement with the Seminole Nation contained in the act of July 1, 1898 (30 Stat., p. 567), as soon as practicable and without waiting for the dissolution of the tribal government, and said principal chief shall execute and deliver said deeds to the Indian allottees and purchasers of town lots as required by said act, etc.

Mr. STEWART. There is a full explanation in a letter which I have here from the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. QUARLES. Will the Senator from Indiana yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. QUARLES. I will say for his information that this provision is necessary in the case of the Seminoles, because we have no treaty stipulation with them which would terminate their tribal relations. We have treaty stipulations with each of the other of the Five Civilized Tribes, providing that the tribal government shall cease on this same day. So it was deemed not only wise but necessary——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It makes it uniform.

Mr. QUARLES. To make it uniform. That is the prime object.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I inferred as much as that, but the point of my inquiry is this: It appears by this section that the allotments will probably, and almost certainly, be completed at an earlier date than that at which the tribal relations will cease, because it seems to say so on the face of the section. I rose to procure some information on that question. It is pertinent to the matter now before the Senate.

Mr. STEWART. You want to know why they proceed to have the deeds made, etc.?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is not just exactly the point. The section provides for the termination of the tribal relations on a day absolute and certain.

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. And before that time, the section says, deeds shall be furnished to the principal chief, who may distribute them to the allottees. Therefore I infer that the allotments are now proceeding and that the allotments will be made necessarily before the date of the cessation of the tribal relation.

Mr. STEWART. On reflection, I recall that that is the intention—before the tribal relations cease.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. This is the suggestion of the Department, as the chairman will remember.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I know.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The time is complete to cover the whole arrangement. The reason the provision for terminating the tribal relation is put in this bill is that there was no time fixed in the agreement made with the Seminoles, as there was with the other nations, as to when it should cease. This supplies by law what was an omission made at the time.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I have been so informed by the Senator from Wisconsin, and I make no objection to the section.

Mr. STEWART. This proceeding goes on as in the other cases.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. So that the allotments will certainly be concluded before that time?

Mr. STEWART. Yes; as in the other cases.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. How long does the Senator think before the time? Will they be completed this year or next year?

Mr. STEWART. In 1906 they must be.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I know they must be before that time, but this section plainly contemplates that it will be before that time.

Mr. STEWART. It will be.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I ask the Senator to give me his estimate as to how long before that time.

Mr. STEWART. It is hoped to get through with them in the next two years or less, if they can.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Or less?

Mr. STEWART. That is the hope. They are struggling to get through with them as soon as they can.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The allotments have practically been made now.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The allotments have practically been made now?

Mr. STEWART. Most of them have been.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. So the only thing the chief would have to do would be to deliver the deeds? That is the important point of the matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 73, after line 19, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 9. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue a fee-simple patent to Harriet Aungie, a Yankton Indian, for the lands heretofore allotted to her in South Dakota, to wit: The southeast quarter and the southwest quarter of section 30, township 95 north, range 63 west of the fifth principal meridian, and all restrictions as to the sale, incumbrance, or taxation of said lands are hereby removed.

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue a patent in fee to Lawrence Johnson, a citizen Pottawatomie allottee, for the lands heretofore allotted to him in Oklahoma, to wit: The north half of the northeast quarter of section 27, township 10 north, range 3 east, of the Indian meridian, and all restrictions as to the sale, incumbrance, or taxation of said lands are hereby removed.

That Tah ko we ah, Kiowa allottee No. 618, and Kome ta me ah, Kiowa allottee No. 621, to whom trust patents have been issued containing restrictions upon alienation, may each sell and convey not exceeding one-half of her allotment, but such conveyance shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, and when so approved shall convey a full title to the purchaser, the same as if a final patent without restriction had been issued to the allottee.

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to issue patents in fee, severally, to John Nestell, William F. Dietrich, Mabel R. Given, William E. Pedrick, Thomas F. Woodard, George W. Conover, Ben. Roache, Rudolph Fisher (whose Indian name is Asewaynah), Louis Bentz, and Emmet Cox, members of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache tribes of Indians, for the lands heretofore allotted to them, respectively, in the Territory of Oklahoma, and all restrictions as to the sale, incumbrance, or taxation of said lands are hereby removed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 75, after line 5, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 10. That that portion of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1901 (31 Stat., p. 1065), entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for other purposes," which reads as follows: "That on and after July 1, 1901, any person desiring to trade with the Indians on said reservation shall, upon establishing the fact to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs that he is a proper person to engage in such trade, be permitted to do so under such rules and regulations as the Commissioner of Indian Affairs may prescribe for the protection of said Indians," is hereby amended and extended so as to apply to all Indian reservations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 75, after line 21, to insert as a new section the foliowing:

SEC. 11. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the same to be repaid from the funds accruing to the credit of the Indians hereinafter named, the sum of $500, or as much thereof as may be necessary, to defray the expenses of an Indian agent in negotiating with the Red Lake and Pembina bands of Chippewa Indians, belonging on the Red Lake Indian Reservation in the State of Minnesota, for the ratification of the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to sell, subject to the homestead laws of the United States, to the highest bidder at public auction, in tracts not to exceed 160 acres to each individual, all that part of the Red Lake Indian Reservation in the State of Minnesota lying westerly of the range line between ranges 38 and 39 west of the fifth principal meridian, approximating 256,000 acres. And the land shall be sold for not less than $4 per acre, and shall be sold upon the following terms: One-fifth of the price bid therefor to be paid at the time the bid is made, and the balance of the purchase price of said land to be paid in five equal annual installments, payment to be made to the receiver of the United States land office for the district in which said land may be situated.

"And in case any purchaser fails to make such annual payment when due, or within sixty days thereafter, all rights in and to the land covered by his or her purchase shall at once cease, and any payments made shall thereupon be forfeited, and the Secretary of the Interior shall thereupon declare such forfeiture by reoffering such land for sale. And no title to said land shall inure to the purchaser, nor any patent issued to the purchaser, until the purchaser or his or her heirs shall have resided upon, improved, and cultivated said land for the full term of five years, without any commutation of time, and shall have in all respects complied with the terms and provisions of the homestead laws of the United States: Provided, That such purchaser shall make his final proof conformable to the homestead laws within six years from the date of the sale; that aliens who have declared their intention to become citizens of the United States may become purchasers under this act, but before making final proof and acquiring title must take out their full naturalization papers: Provided, That sections 16 and 36 of each township are hereby excepted from the provisions of this act and are hereby granted to the State of Minnesota for school purposes.

"All of the Indians residing upon the tract above described shall remove therefrom to the diminished Red Lake Reservation within six months after the ratification of this act; and there is hereby appropriated from the proceeds of said sale the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be paid to those thus removing in proportion to their respective improvements, which payment to said Red Lake Indians shall be in full of all improvements which they will abandon, and also for the removal within the diminished reservation of their dead from where they are now buried on the tract above described. The proceeds of said lands, as realized from time to time, shall be paid into the United States Treasury to the credit of the Indians belonging on said Red Lake Reservation.

"Of the amount realized from the sale of said lands the sum of $300,000 shall be paid in cash, per capita, share and share alike, to each man, woman, and child belonging on said Red Lake Indian Reservation within ninety days after the sale herein provided for, and the remainder of the proceeds of the sale of said lands shall be paid in cash, per capita, in 15 annual installments, the first installment to be paid in the month of October of the year following that in which the payment of the $300,000 is made.

"In consideration of the Indians hereinafter referred to ratifying this act, the said Indians shall possess their diminished reservation independent of all other bands of Chippewa Indians, and shall be entitled to allotments thereon of 160 acres each of either agricultural or pine land, the different classes of land to be appropriated as equitably as possible among the allottees. And nothing in this act or its acceptance by said Indians shall be construed to deprive the said Indians of any benefits to which they are entitled under existing treaties or agreements not inconsistent with the provisions of this act.

"The Secretary of the Interior is hereby vested with full power and authority to make such rules and regulations as to the time of notice, manner of sale, and other matters incident to the carrying out of the provisions of this act as he may deem necessary, and with authority to continue making sales of said land until all of said land shall have been sold. The register and receiver shall receive the usual fees for making final proof under this act.

"This act shall take effect and be in force from and after its ratification by the Red Lake and Pembina bands of Chippewa Indians belonging on the Red Lake Indian Reservation, in the State of Minnesota, a majority of the male adults of said Indians assenting thereto, and the evidence thereof to be made by the proclamation of the President to the effect that this act has been duly ratified. And the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to submit this act to said Indians for ratification as early as is practicable."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 79, after line 19, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 12. That jurisdiction, legal and equitable, be, and is hereby, conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claims of the Chippewa Indians of Lake Superior and the Mississippi for certain sums of money claimed by said Indians to be due them under the several treaties dating from 1837 to 1855, which sums have been covered into the Treasury of the United States at various times since the year 1843, and that said action shall be entitled "The Chippewas of Lake Superior and the Mississippi against The United States," if brought jointly, and if brought separately shall be entitled "The Chippewas of Lake Superior against The United States," or "The Chippewas of the Mississippi against The United States," and may be instituted by said Indians in said court by a petition filed and verified, under oath, by any attorney authorized to represent said Chippewas of Lake Superior and by any attorney authorized to represent said Chippewas of the Mississippi, to which action or actions the United States shall be made defendants.

To hear and determine the claims of the Chippewa Indians of Lake Superior and the Mississippi for certain sums of money claimed by said Indians to be due them under the several treaties prior to 1863, in the difference in value between coin and the currency paid to said Indians during the years from 1863 to 1864, inclusive; and said action shall be entitled "The Chippewas of Lake Superior and the Mississippi against The United States," if brought jointly, and if brought separately shall be entitled "The Chippewas of Lake Superior against The United States," or "The Chippewas of the Mississippi against The United States," and may be instituted by said Indians in said court by a petition filed and verified under oath by any attorney authorized to represent said Chippewas of Lake Superior and said Chippewas of the Mississippi, or either; to such action or actions the United States shall be made defendants.

And to hear and determine the claim of the Delaware Indians in the Cherokee Nation, arising under the following statement:

First. Whether the United States received the sum of $286,742.15, or any part thereof, from the sale of lands of the Delaware Indians under the treaties of 1860 and 1861, in gold coin.

Second. If so, was the United States under obligation to pay the said Indians in gold coin the interest and principal of the said sum of $286,742.15, or any part thereof?

Third. If so, did the United States pay the said Indians the principal and interest, or any part thereof, in anything but gold coin; and if so, what was the difference in value between the bonds or currency paid to said Indians and gold coin at the time the several payments were made to said Indians out of the fund aforesaid?

Fourth. If so, did said Indians make objection to payment in anything but gold coin, and did said Indians voluntarily waive their right to payment in gold coin without objecting to the receipt of bonds or currency?

Fifth. If no waiver was made by said Indians, is the United States still obliged to pay said Indians such difference in value between gold coin, principal and interest, or any part thereof, which the United States was under obligation to pay and the currency value of the money or bonds actually paid to said Indians?

And said action may be brought by said Delaware Indians (residing in the Cherokee Nation), and shall be entitled "The Delaware Indians against The United States," and shall be instituted by petition, duly verified by such member of said Delaware Indian tribe as is authorized to represent them, or by any of the counsel and attorneys employed by said Delaware Indians, or by their representative, to which action the United States shall be made defendants: Provided, That any sums that may be found due said Delaware Indians in the final adjudication of such suit shall, when appropriated, be paid to said Delaware tribe of Indians as said tribe in council shall direct, except so much as the court shall, upon the rendition of any judgment under the provisions of this act, allow for the payment of the proper fees, expenses, and compensation to the representatives of said Delawares and the counsel and attorneys of record, whose several interests therein shall be determined by the court.

And to hear and determine all claims and demands of the White River Utes, Southern Utes, Uncompahgre Utes, Tabeyuache, Muache, Capote, Weeminuche, Yampa, Grand River, and Uinta bands of Ute Indians, known also as the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians of Colorado, as defined in the treaty of March 2, 1868, and agreement ratified by Congress and said Indians of June 15, 1880, against the United States arising under treaties and agreements with the United States ratified by Congress, including any and all claims arising from the use of lands for the occupation of railroads and other public highways or public uses not herein excepted from the jurisdiction conferred by this act, and all demands on the part of the United States and claims against said Indians growing out of treaty obligations and agreements ratified by Congress except judgments of the Court of Claims for depredations committed by said Indians and the capitalized annuity and interest thereon hereinafter provided to be set off against the compensation to said Indians for certain timber and forest reservations; but excluding the claims of said Indians to compensation for lands embraced within the White River Plateau Timber and Land Reserve, set apart to the United States under Executive order and proclamation of the President dated October 16, 1891, and the Battlement Mesa Forest Reserve, set apart to the United States under Executive order and the proclamation of the President December 24, 1892; against the compensation for said reservations which may hereafter be allowed and paid to said Indians there shall be set off the sum of $1,250,000, being an amount of money sufficient at 4 per cent to produce annually $50,000, together with the interest arising on said fund, annually paid to said Indians per capita in cash under the provisions of section 5 of the "act to accept and ratify the agreement submitted by the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians in Colorado for the sale of their reservation in said State, and for other purposes, and to make the necessary appropriation for carrying out the same," approved June 15, 1880, which sum and the annuity arising therefrom shall not enter into or form a part of any set-off to be offered by the United States in the action herein provided for; and the Secretary of the Interior shall report to Congress at its next session the acreage and character of the lands embraced within the said reservation, classifying the same as mineral, agricultural, timber, and stone lands, and shall report the estimated value of each class of said lands per acre, and he shall immediately enter into negotiations with said Indians for the purpose of agreeing upon the compensation which shall be paid to them by the United States for said lands, in which negotiations the said Indians may be represented by the attorneys by this act authorized to represent them in the courts, whose compensation shall not exceed 15 per cent of the amount which may be allowed to said Indians after deducting the set-off herein provided: that said action may be commenced by the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians by petitions filed in the said court by Josiah M. Vale, Courtland C. Clements, Kie Oldham, William C. Sheiley, Adair Wilson, and William S. Peabody, the attorneys named in the contracts between said Indians and said attorneys on file in the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, bearing date November 7, 1896, October 31, 1896, and July 1, 1897, who are authorized to represent said Indians in said action, the said petition to be verified under oath by either of said attorneys, to which action the United States shall be made defendants.

That the Attorney-General is hereby directed to appear and defend each of said actions provided for herein; that the petition in each case shall be filed in said court within one year from the date of the passage of this act, and the United States shall answer to each of said petitions within sixty days from the date of the filing of the same unless the time for pleading shall be enlarged by the court; that either party to each said actions may appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, and such cases, both in the Court of Claims and in the Supreme Court, shall be preferred cases and advanced on the dockets of the courts above mentioned, and shall be heard and determined as early as practicable. The judgment of said Court of Claims, or of the Supreme Court, if appeal is taken thereto, shall be final and conclusive as to the rights of all parties interested.

That at the time of rendering judgment in each case the Court of Claims shall, as part of its findings and as a part of such judgment, fix and enter of record proper allowances for expenses and compensation to representatives and fees to counsel and attorneys, which may be paid direct to the persons entitled thereto as soon as there is any money in the Treasury available for the payment of such judgment, the fees to attorneys and counsel not to exceed in each case 15 per cent of the amount of the judgment: Provided, That in cases appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States the Court of Claims may, in its discretion, increase the allowances for cost and fees therein.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, I think I will make a point of order on the amendment, that it is new legislation, beginning——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah will state his point of order.

Mr. RAWLINS. That it is new legislation, beginning on page 83 with the words "and to hear and determine all claims and demands of the White River Utes."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To what does the Senator's point of order apply?

Mr. RAWLINS. The point to which I refer begins with the third line on page 83 and extends down to the end of the section.

Mr. SPOONER. We can not hear the Senator from Utah.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah raises the point of order that the amendment is general legislation from line 3, page 83, through to the end of the section, at the bottom of page 86.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. That is no more legislation than considerable matter which precedes it. It really commences on page 79 with section 12. It is a part of section 12. I do not think the point of order lies to a portion of the section.

With regard to the matter against which the point of order has been made, I think the portion relating to the Utes, providing that they may bring a suit in the Court of Claims, is just as meritorious as the other suits that are authorized to be brought by section 12, one of which is the Chippewa Indians of Lake Superior and the Mississippi, and another the claim of the Delaware Indians in the Cherokee Nation.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, I withdraw my point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah withdraws his point of order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee inserting a new section as section 12.

Mr. SPOONER. I wish to call the attention of the Senator who has charge of the bill to the first clause of section 12, on page 79. The section confers jurisdiction, legal and equitable, upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine a number of entirely distinct and different claims.

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Mr. SPOONER. I think it might be more clearly worded. If agreeable to the Senator, I move to insert, after the word "claims," in line 21, page 79, the words "as follows;" so as to read:

That jurisdiction, legal and equitable, be, and is hereby, conferred upon the Court of Claims, as follows.

Mr. STEWART. That is an improvement.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. That is all right.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPOONER. Then, in line 14, page 80, I move to insert the word "and" before "To;" so as to read:

And to hear and determine the claims of the Chippewa Indians of Lake Superior and the Mississippi, etc.

Mr. STEWART. Yes; that is an improvement.

Mr. SPOONER. There is less likelihood of confusion with that change.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 86, after line 22, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 13. That any one or more of the registers and receivers of the United States land offices in the State of Kansas upon whom were imposed the responsibility of making sale and disposal of the Osage ceded, Osage trust, and Osage diminished reserve land, in said State, under the treaty of September 29, 1865, between the United States and the Osage Indians, and the acts of Congress for carrying said treaty into effect, may bring suit in the Court of Claims against the Osage Nation and the United States to determine the claim of the plaintiff or plaintiffs for commissions or compensation for the sale of said lands or any service or duty connected therewith. And the said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine said cause and to render judgment thereon on the merits; and the Attorney-General shall appear on behalf of the United States and the Osage Nation, and either party feeling aggrieved at the decision of the Court of Claims may appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, and the final judgment in such case shall determine the rights of all such registers and receivers similarly situated. Said Osage Nation may also appear in said suit by an attorney employed with the authority of said nation. The Court of Claims shall have full authority, by proper orders and process, to make parties to any such suit all persons whose presence in the litigation it may deem necessary or proper to the final determination of the matter in controversy.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I wish to know if it would not be more grammatical to use the word "was" in line 25 than the word "were."

Mr. STEWART. I think it would be.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It would then read "upon whom was imposed the responsibility."

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Yes; and in the third line of the section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 86, line 25, before "imposed," strike out "were" and insert "was."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment on page 45, line 12, was passed over.

Mr. STEWART. Let that amendment be disagreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The committee propose to strike out line 12 to line 15, inclusive, on page 45, in the following words:

To maintain at the city of Omaha, Nebr., in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, a warehouse for the receipt, storage, and shipping of goods for the Indian Service, $10,000.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. STEWART. On page 2, the amendment striking out lines 21 and 22 should be disagreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, strike out lines 21 and 22 in the following words:

At the Fort Berthold Agency, N. Dak., $1,500.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CLAPP. I understood that the committee would authorize the amendment I now offer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are the committee amendments completed?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] is not in his chair. He made a point of order awhile ago on one of the committee amendments. I should be glad to have that stand over until some subsequent consideration of the question on the point of order by the Senate. The Chair ruled that the amendment was out of order. I should like to be heard upon that question for a moment, perhaps. I am not sure that I shall, but I should like to reserve whatever rights I have until the bill comes again before the Senate.

Mr. STEWART. In reference to the amendment which the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] wishes to propose, I will state that the letter is not here and there are some little matters to be considered about it.

Mr. CLAPP. The letter is here.

Mr. STEWART. I think we might as well let it go over until Monday. There are matters in the bill that have to go over anyway. However, I have no objection to its being heard now. I have not had time to look at it.

Mr. CLAPP. It would take so much time on Monday, that is all.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The bill is going over until Monday anyway.

Mr. STEWART. The bill is to go over anyway.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that there is a special order for 3 o'clock, and it lacks only a few minutes of 3.

Mr. ALDRICH. The order for 3 o'clock has been withdrawn.

Mr. STEWART. Then if we go on with the bill we may be able to dispose of the whole measure. I have no objection to the Senator from Minnesota offering his amendment now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota offers an amendment which will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 12, after line 7, insert:

For surveying, examining, appraising, logging, and selling the pine timber upon the ceded lands of the Chippewa Indian reservations in Minnesota, under the provisions of the act approved January 14, 1889, as amended by the act entitled "An act to amend the act entitled 'An act for the relief and civilization of the Indians in the State of Minnesota, approved January 14, 1889,' approved June 27, 1902."

The sum of $90,000 to be reimbursed to the United States out of the proceeds of the sale of the timber upon said lands, $40,000 of which shall be immediately available.

Mr. STEWART. I think it would be more satisfactory if the letter of the Secretary of the Interior were printed and if the amendment should go over with the bill. I presume there will be no objection to that course.

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly there can not be any objection to the amendment. The Secretary recommends it. He can not go on with the work unless the appropriation is made, and it is work that has been already directed by the act referred to. It is the opening of this reservation——

Mr. STEWART. I shall not object to its consideration at this time. I merely made the suggestion.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I think it would be better to let the amendment go over with the rest of the bill, It can not possibly expedite the matter to consider it this afternoon.

Mr. CLAPP. I know the committee are anxious to get through with the bill; but I will let it go over until Monday.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Anyhow the provision would not become effective before the bill passes, so that the anxiety of the people could not be gratified before the bill itself could be passed, and therefore no time would be gained by disposing of it to-day.

Mr. CLAPP. I do not want to be an obstructionist to the further consideration of the statehood bill and I will not press the amendment to-day.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is right. I am anxious myself to push the discussion of that measure.

Mr. STEWART. Let the letter of the Secretary of the Interior be sent to the desk and printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the proposed amendment and letter accompanying it will be printed.

The letter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 13, 1903.

The CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS, Senate.

SIR: I inclose a copy of a letter of the 9th instant from the Commissioner of the General Land Office to the Department, wherein he has recommended that an estimate of $90,000 be submitted "For surveying, examining, appraising, logging, and selling the pine timber upon the ceded lands of the Chippewa Indian Reservation in Minnesota, under the provisions of the act approved January 14, 1889, as amended by the act of June 27, 1902, to be reimbursed to the United States out of the proceeds of the sale of the timber upon said lands, $40,000 of which shall be immediately available."

It appears from his report that it is essential that the appropriation be made, and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in a letter of the 10th instant, copy herewith, has expressed his concurrence in the recommendation of the Commissioner of the General Land Office and has, in turn, recommended the submission of such estimate to the Congress.

In view of the recommendations and of the apparent necessities of the case, I have the honor to recommend that an item of $90,000 for the purposes and in the form suggested above be inserted in the pending Indian Appropriation bill.

Very respectfully, E. A. HITCHCOCK, Secretary.

Mr. QUAY. I offer an amendment, which I understand the chairman of the committee does not object to.

Mr. STEWART. I do not know that I have any objection to it. I will hear it read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 37, line 10, after the word "dollars," insert:

Provided, That the money hereby appropriated shall be applied only to the expenses incident to the survey, platting, and appraisement of town sites heretofore segregated or now in process of segregation, and not to any new addition to any town site heretofore established or segregated, and

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. To what provision is this an amendment?

Mr. QUAY. The town-site provision. I will state in explanation that the understanding, I think, of the Interior Department and the Committee on Indian Affairs is that the segregation of town sites in the Indian Territory shall now cease. That section of the Curtis law providing for the establishment of towns along the railroads was intended to apply to the towns theretofore founded by the Indians, and it has served its purpose.

Now, as I understand it, its provisions are being used by speculators, who are locating sites along the railroads at the expense of the Government. That is to say, a number of individuals, finding an eligible site for a town lot, jump the Indian allotments under the town-site law, and, at an expense of $5,000 or $6,000 or $7,000 to the Government of the United States, have a town laid out, with its streets and alleys and lots surveyed, and put their improvements upon it, and under the Curtis law, having improved it, they obtain the property of the Indians at 50 per cent of its valuation. That is about the status.

The appropriation was reduced by the Committee on Indian Affairs to $25,000 with the understanding that that sort of practice would cease, but I think it is better that the intention of the Senate, the Department, and the Committee on Indian Affairs should be distinctly expressed by this amendment, to which I understand the chairman does not object.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I would rather have the matter go over until Monday with the rest.

Mr. QUAY. If there is any reason for the amendment going over——

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Although the explanation of the Senator has a virtuous aspect and is no doubt entirely correct and adequate, still I do not altogether understand this matter, and everything in relation to the Indians and the Indian Territory, with the prospect of statehood down there, is of consequence. I do not see that anything can be injured by letting the amendment lie over until Monday. I am not strenuous about this matter, and if it is disagreeable to the Senator I will not object to its present consideration.

Mr. QUAY. Not at all. The Senator indicates a deep interest in the question of statehood for the Indian Territory, and if it is going to facilitate the final disposition of the very interesting measure now before the Senate the amendment can go over of course. I do not object to its going over until Monday.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am glad to hear the expression on the part of the Senator that he is willing to have statehood for the Indian Territory.

Mr. QUAY. Under certain limitations, I have no objection to it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I am for it without limitation—a single State of Oklahoma and Indian Territory without strings.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator from Nevada is through——

Mr. STEWART. I ask that the bill may lie over, and I will ask the Senate to take it up in the morning hour on Monday.

SAFE-KEEPING OF PUBLIC MONEY.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask the Senate to proceed, by unanimous consent, to the consideration of the bill (S. 7301) to further provide for the safe-keeping of public money, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island asks that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside for that purpose?

Mr, ALDRICH. That is my request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read to the Senate in full for its information.

The Secretary read the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BERRY. I object, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas objects.

Mr. DUBOIS. I was going to ask the Senator from Rhode Island if he would explain the bill. I see that it makes some change in the existing law.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should be very glad to explain the bill if the Senator from Arkansas would withdraw his objection.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I hope the Senator from Arkansas will withdraw his objection sufficiently to allow the Senator from Rhode Island to make an explanation.

Mr. BERRY. I have no objection to the Senator making an explanation, but I do not think the bill ought to pass without some kind of discussion. I want to look at it and see what is in it. I do not think we can pass it this evening in view of the special order, but I will withdraw my objection for the present, until the Senator can make an explanation.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have no desire to press the bill upon the consideration of the Senate unduly. It has been very carefully considered. Of course I should be very glad to discuss any of its provisions with the Senator.

Mr. BERRY. I do not suppose we have time this evening to have the explanation or the discussion that I think it ought to have. I want to look at the bill and examine it further. I never saw it until I heard it read at the desk.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have no objection to the bill going over. It has been very carefully considered by the Finance Committee.

Mr. BERRY. I want to look at it before I agree to its consideration. I want to know what is in it.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have no objection to the bill going over. I give notice that I shall call it up at some time when the Senator from Arkansas is present.

REVENUE FOR PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Mr. LODGE. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15702) to amend an act entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenue for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," approved March 8, 1902.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, I did not understand for what bill consideration is asked.

Mr. LODGE. The Philippine tariff bill.

Mr. PATTERSON. I object, Mr. President.

Mr. LODGE. I trust the Senator will withhold his objection until the committee amendments are adopted.

Mr. PATTERSON. And then interpose the objection?

Mr. LODGE. Yes. I trust the Senator will allow the bill to be perfected and then it can go over if he so desires.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I am heartily in favor of the immediate consideration of the bill, but I am just as heartily opposed to the amendments of the committee; and I wish to say to the Senator from Massachusetts at this time that I shall oppose the amendments increasing the tariff duties, as recommended by the committee, from 25 to 50 per cent.

Mr. LODGE. I will say to the Senator from Ohio that I agree with him as to the amount of reduction which ought to be made, but if the Senate amendments are not adopted the bill can not pass. I prefer to take the bill with a partial reduction rather than to lose the bill by trying to get what I know will give rise to so much opposition and debate as will make it impossible at this session to pass it.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not know by what warrant the Senator says the bill can not pass unless the duty is increased from 25 to 50 per cent on certain articles, as recommended by the committee. It is now perfectly apparent to everybody that we have a condition of distress in the Philippine Islands that is largely due to the fact that for the products of those islands they have no market, and we owe it to that people—our own, as they are—to give them a market.

This is a matter about which I feel most keenly. The Senator will remember when the bill was passed providing that the tariff should be 75 per cent of the Dingley rates on products coming into this country from the Philippine Islands, I then wanted to put it down to 25 per cent. I wanted to put it down to 25 per cent because the information I then had as to the situation in the Philippine Islands led me to believe that there could not be any prosperity in those islands unless the people there were given a market for their products, and this is the only country which can give them a market for their products.

What was then predicted has come to pass. They have poverty and suffering and need help. If we put the duty at 50 per cent we do it in the face of the recommendations of Governor Taft and of everybody else who is charged with the responsibility of government in the Philippine Islands. Our experiment of government there will be an absolute failure, in my judgment, unless we make conditions there which will admit of prosperity; and I want, whenever this matter is taken up, to discuss that proposition.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the House of Representatives sent to the Senate a bill, which has just been read, which reduces the duty, as the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] has stated, on all articles produced in the Philippine Islands to 25 per cent of existing rates. Personally, I am in favor of that reduction. The committee has amended that House proposition so as to admit to this country all the products of the Philippine Islands entirely free of duty, except sugar and tobacco. On those articles the amendment provides for half the existing rates, instead of three-fourths, as at present collected.

Mr. President, when I said what I did, I spoke, I think, with knowledge in regard to the opposition to reducing the duty on sugar and tobacco, the only two articles on which duties are retained, below 50 per cent of the present rates. I am certain that if we seek to retain the House proposition, it will lead to such a protracted debate that the bill will be lost.

Mr. President, the situation in business in the Philippine Islands is extremely bad. The measure that is most needed there is that which provides for giving them a stable currency. Their currency is now in a condition of chaos. The lowering of our duties will undoubtedly help them in their export trade.

At this stage of the session it is not a question of whether we can get a little more or less reduction, but to get the best possible. The complete failure of these two bills would be, in my judgment, an act of absolute cruelty to the people of those islands. I should like to get a 75 per cent reduction; but rather than lose the bill I will compromise on 50 per cent on sugar and tobacco.

Those bills are both of essential importance to the people of those islands, and I hope the Senate, before this session concludes, will pass both bills and enable them to become law before the 4th of March.

I can only say to the Senator from Ohio that I hope he will be willing to do what I have done, and at a sacrifice of his own personal opinion get the best we can at this time in the reduction of the tariff; make everything free, except sugar and tobacco, and lower the duty on them 50 per cent.

I am sure, Mr. President, that that is the most immediate and direct way to giving some help to the business interests of the Philippine Islands, and they need it very much indeed.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, when I am satisfied that that is the best we can do I shall then be willing to vote for the bill, but I should vote for it under protest and with a feeling that I had not voted for the kind of legislation we ought to enact if I were to support a bill that provides for the imposition of 50 per cent of the Dingley rates upon any of the products of the Philippine Islands coming into this country. If we are going out into the sea to take in acquisitions of territory of this character we must do it with the understanding that they become our possessions and that we become responsible not only for their government, but for their prosperity as well, and that we must treat them accordingly.

I believe we ought to treat them as our own; not as foreigners. I have looked into this matter enough, and if there were time I should be glad to go into it at length to satisfy me that there is no danger to any interest in this country from opening our markets to the Filipinos; and if there were it would be only from the competition of one part of our country with another part. If we were to admit all of their sugar and all of their tobacco here absolutely free of duty, in my judgment we would not be doing anything more than we ought to do.

If it comes to the point where, on account of these objecting industries, we can not treat our own as our own should be treated, I shall move that we have absolute free trade between the United States and the Philippine Islands.

In that country they will have this year, I am told, not more than 10,000 tons of sugar, the poverty and distress being such that production of that article is reduced to that pitiable result.

Mr. PATTERSON. Will the Senator from Ohio permit me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. PATTERSON. I think the Senator from Ohio is mistaken when he says that the reduction of the tariff as proposed will interfere with no industry in this country. It is true the importation of sugar from the Philippine Islands is now exceedingly small; but the Senator will bear in mind that the testimony taken before the Philippines Committee is that there are in the neighborhood of 8,000,000 acres of Philippine soil that is as well adapted to the raising of sugar as is the soil of the Hawaiian Islands or the island of Cuba; and with the land laws that are in force there now, with the opportunities for the great exploiting corporations to get possession of the lands by the thousands of acres, I will venture the assertion that, if this bill becomes a law, within less than ten years the local sugar industry of the United States will be practically wiped out; that the sugar-cane industry of Louisiana and the beet-sugar industry of the State of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS], of the State of Colorado, and of other beet-sugar raising States, in ten years will be wiped out on account of the immense area of that Philippine territory that may be used for the cultivation of sugar.

It is for that reason that I oppose this bill. I prefer the bill as it is proposed to be amended, because it does yet keep up some barrier against the sugar of those islands as their production may be increased; but I am opposed to the reduction of the tariff to any extent beyond what it now is for the same reason that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] would oppose the reduction of the tariff upon articles which his State produces, and for the same reason that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] would oppose the reduction of the tariff upon articles which his State produces.

I knew very well that these great industrial questions were bound to arise, and before our country is flooded with the products of those islands the proposition is to open the door wide so that they can come in without opposition.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator permit me a question?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. From what the Senator says I infer that the Senator is not in favor of a tariff for revenue only. Is that correct?

Mr. PATTERSON. As long as protection, whatever its phase may be, is the controlling economic position of this country, I propose to stand for the protection of the products of my own section, whatever my attitude may be upon the question of the tariff as a broad, general proposition.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I do not at all share the apprehensions of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON]. If I did, I might possibly dislike the idea I am advocating, for I do not want to do any injury to the industries of this country. For the present there is no danger of that.

My information is that the total product of sugar, for instance, in the Philippine Islands for any year has been not in excess of about 60,000 tons, and that this year it will not exceed 10,000 tons.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator will pardon me just a moment, my information is that it will be quite a number of years, necessarily, in view of existing conditions, before they can produce any great amount of sugar in the Philippine Islands. When the great increase that the Senator apprehends will come does come, those who come after us can legislate for the Philippine Islands. What they want and need now is a market in which to sell the products which they have; and we ought to give it to them.

Mr. PATTERSON. That would be closing the stable door after the horse had been stolen.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. FORAKER. Yes; I yield to both of them.

Mr. TELLER. I want to say to the Senator what he ought to know, and what he probably does know, that before our war with Spain the Philippine Islands produced 400,000 tons of sugar.

Mr. FORAKER. Not for export.

Mr. TELLER. For export.

Mr. President, those islands can produce all the sugar that we want to use and a great deal more, and with their cheap labor, with a million of Chinese or half-breeds which they have, they will put our American sugar growers on a par with that class of laborers.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I am glad to see the Senator from Colorado is apprehensive about the protection of American industries.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Ohio need not throw that at me.

Mr. FORAKER. No; I do not.

Mr. TELLER. I have myself always been a protectionist.

Mr. FORAKER. I understand and appreciate that fact.

Mr. TELLER. But I insist that protection shall apply to the people of the West as well as it does to the people of the East.

Mr. FORAKER. I was not throwing anything at the Senator. I was simply saying that I was glad to see that he favors the protection of American industry. But, Mr. President, it is an American industry that you find in an American possession, wherever it may be. If we are going to hold the Philippine Islands, I want the Philippine Islands to have prosperity. What is produced in the Philippine Islands is an American production, and we should protect and develop it the same as any other production of any other part of our country. We should not bar them out of our market as to their natural products and drive them into something that is not natural to them as an industry. They must live; and they must prosper, or all we do is failure.

When Senators talk about sugar, they should remember that we consume in this country two and half million tons per annum. Of that amount we produce in this country and in all our possessions less than a thousand tons. We must have a million and a half tons from some place; and why not have this million and a half tons from our own people, instead of getting it from Germany or from some other country, as we are doing to-day?

I believe in giving to the people of the Philippine Islands—who are to-day in distress more than for any other reason because they have no market in which to sell their products—the American market on reasonable terms.

I would not favor putting any duty on their products coming into this country, except only to furnish revenue for the support of their government. It is because their government needs revenue that I am willing that we may impose some duty on goods coming into this country, which duty is to be collected for the benefit of that government. Otherwise I should be in favor of treating their products just as we treat the products of any other part of our country. The policy of protection has been protection against the products of foreign countries. We have never had protection against the products of our own country—one State or section against another—and I hope we never shall.

I understand the bill is now going over, and therefore I shall not prolong my remarks.

Mr. PATTERSON. I should like to ask the Senator a question, with his permission.

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. PATTERSON. The Senator speaks of the Philippine Islands being "our territory." Do I understand by that that the Senator is now ready to proclaim that it is his policy to hold the Philippine Islands forever, or, as I understood the position of the Senator to be at the last session of Congress, to hold them until they are ready for self-government?

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, according to the judgment of the Senator from Colorado as to the capacity of that people, that would be forever, as he has told us time and time again.

I have said that I want to hold the Philippine Islands until they are capable of self-government and until we shall have discharged all the obligations which we undertook in the treaty of peace with Spain, and that will be so long in the future that it is a matter we need not now consider. The Philippine Islands will be our possession through many years to come, as every Senator here knows, and it is idle to discuss whether or not we shall ever part company with them. We know they are ours now, a possession of the United States. We are responsible for the government of the Philippine Islands, and we are responsible for the conditions industrially that obtain there in so far as legislation may have to do with those conditions. Let us attend now to the duties of the present and leave those of the future to our successors.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, I do not care to go into any discussion of this matter, except to say that, so far as I am concerned, I should be entirely willing for this bill to be now considered and to be very soon voted upon.

I want to say, however, that, in my judgment, this reduction of 50 per cent would be absolutely without any value whatever to the people of the Philippine Islands, and that if it had been of any value, it would be impossible to pass it through this Senate or through this Congress. It is a notorious fact that we are permitted to pass the bill in its present shape only because Mr. Oxnard has decided that he is willing for it to be passed in this shape; and Mr. Oxnard did not consent for it to be passed in this shape until after he had decided that it would not do him any harm or would not do the Filipinos any good. Consequently I think that it is a matter of very small consequence whether this bill passes in this form or not. I am willing myself for the bill to be considered and for the Senate to vote on it with very little debate after voting on probably two or three amendments, which we shall have to present.

I want to suggest to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], when he says we must legislate with a view to benefit the people of the Philippine Islands, that, in my judgment, the time will never come when this Congress will be influenced by any such motive. It will legislate from the narrowest point of view and for the selfish interests of a few people in the United States without any reference whatever to the welfare of the people of the Philippine Islands. I do not think I have seen any indication whatever on the part of those who are most responsible for Philippine legislation of any real desire to promote the welfare of the Filipinos. It is always some desire to get some advantage for somebody in the United States.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I have here an extract from a newspaper published at Habana which I want to have printed in the RECORD in connection with this debate. It touches on the question of the reduction of the duty on sugar. It is short, and I will indicate what I desire to have printed. The article sets forth the opinion of the editor of one of the leading newspapers in the island of Cuba. I desire to use it, and I want to have it in the RECORD so that Senators may see it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado asks that the paper which he sends to the desk may be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. HOAR. Is the article long?

Mr. TELLER. No; it is not long.

Mr. HOAR. If it is not long, I think it ought to be read. I do not like the precedent of printing newspaper articles in the RECORD without reading.

Mr. TELLER. I have no objection to its being read. We have, however, been in the habit of putting such things in the RECORD, depending upon the sense of propriety of the Senator presenting them as to their contents.

Mr. HOAR. I have not the slightest doubt of the Senator's soundness of judgment in such a thing. I hope he understands that.

Mr. TELLER. Let the article be read.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, before the reading takes place, I wish to advise the Senate that when it is concluded I shall ask that the memorial exercises, which were set for this afternoon in relation to the deaths of several members of the other House, may take place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the article submitted by Mr. TELLER.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I suggest, as the reading so far as it has progressed has indicated the scope of this article, that it may go in the RECORD without further reading if that be agreeable to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. TELLER. It is agreeable to me, but the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] asked that the article be read.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I have spoken to the Senator from Massachusetts in regard to dispensing with its further reading.

Mr. HOAR. I have no objection. I only desired that the Senate should know the purport of the article.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to the request that the further reading of the article be dispensed with and that it be printed in the RECORD, so that order will be made.

The article is as follows:

QUESTIONS OF THE DAY.

At a recent meeting of a local committee of the Planters' Society Señor Garcia made a speech in which he gave the usual outline of the plans of the society.

The following is what he had to say about the outlook for the sugar industry in Cuba:

"It is almost sure that in the coming September the Brussels convention will be put in force, to which all have now agreed except Russia, and this will cause a reduction in the production of beet sugar. If to this be added the approbation of the reciprocity treaty with the United States by the American Senate, we shall acquire a greater benefit than that represented by the small reduction of 20 per cent granted to Cuban sugar, a benefit to which those who discuss the treaty here have not given their attention.

"The great danger for Cuban sugar is not the German, Belgian, or Javan product; our great enemy is American beet sugar. If the production of beet sugar continues to increase in the United States, our prospects are seriously threatened, and therefore anything that directly or indirectly tends to prevent the increase of the same favors us, and we ought to accept it. This is what occurs with the treaty, because the 20 per cent concession, small as it is, weakens the protectionist wall, only behind which can the American beet men and capitalists fight us, and they, fearing the consequences of distant but probable undermining of the wall, hesitate to-day about giving to an industry which may disappear to-morrow, crushed by our competition, the monetary resources it needs for its increase and development. This is the secret of the fierce opposition which has been made in the American Congress.

"Returning now to the effects of the treaty, if the Brussels convention causes a reduction in the production of beet sugar, an increase in the production of cane sugar will be of necessity caused, and it is probable that this increase will take place in Cuba more than in other places, owing to the favorable conditions existing here for the cultivation of the cane; above all, if the commercial treaty favors our products in the American market. There are, moreover, at present two factors which favor this increase; the foreign capital which is being invested in lands for the cultivation of cane and the opening of the Central Railroad, which facilitates the exploitation of virgin districts which up to now have remained abandoned through the lack of communication. If for all these reasons the production increases and we do not prepare in time, we are certain to find ourselves enveloped in a dangerous crisis here.

"You will ask, How can an event be prejudicial which in itself means prosperity and abundance? We have plenty of land, as there are two-thirds of the country waiting for the cultivator. Machinery: It is now a question of a few months to put up a mill which can grind 200,000 sacks of sugar. Money: With the profits being made there will be money enough. Ways of communication: We have along the existing railroads alone and in the districts adjoining the ports enough land to produce 3,000,000 or 4,000,000 tons. But what we want is labor; and if we do not study the matter and prepare for the difficulty in time we shall be faced with a grave problem.

"With the existing supply of labor in Cuba double the amount of cane can be cultivated that can be grown, and if we devote ourselves to planting without bearing in mind that the day will arrive for grinding we will find ourselves with the crisis upon us.

"According to my calculations the cultivation of the cane costs as much as to gather it in. To keep a cane field in good order and to make the necessary annual plantings costs in the Cienfuegos districts $1 for every 100 arrobas of cane, and we all know that to cut and convey the cane to the mill costs the same. But, and this is the question, the cultivation lasts eight months and the crop four, and if the cultivator pays the same amount in wages as the gatherer it is obvious that double the number of men must be employed by the latter. If the number of men for the gathering in of the cane and the men necessary for the manufacture of the sugar, transport, etc., be added, it becomes clear that the time may arrive when we may have twice as much cane in our fields as we can grind; and even if this condition does not come to pass, if the production of cane increases and the number of hands does not increase with it, labor will become dearer in direct ratio to the increase, and the profits of the planter will diminish in proportion."

For this reason Señor Garcia recommends that steps be taken to provide for the transport of immigrants, so that when the time comes we may have all the laborers we may require.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. PATTERSON. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made by the Senator from Colorado, and the bill goes over.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. B. F. BARNES, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on this day approved and signed the act (S. 569) to establish the Department of Commerce and Labor.

THE RIO GRANDE RIVER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, and calls the attention of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] to it. The message will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

To the Senate:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State, with accompanying papers, in regard to the equitable distribution of the waters of the Rio Grande, called for by the Senate resolution of June 6, 1902.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, February 14, 1903.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What disposition does the Senator desire of the message?

Mr. TELLER. Let it be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall it be referred to any committee?

Mr. TELLER. No, I think not. It is for the information of outside people, and not particularly for this body.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The message will be printed and lie on the table.

HENRY L. M'CALLA.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 2557) for the relief of Henry L. McCalla.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, and that the bill named by him be now considered. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, with an amendment in line 7, after the word "discharge," to insert:

Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of dishonorable dismissal against Henry L. McCalla, late captain of Company G, Thirty-first Regiment Indiana Volunteers, and grant him an honorable discharge: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emolument shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The amendment were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. C. R. MCKENNEY, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16842) making appropriations for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes; asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MCCLEARY, Mr. BURKETT, and Mr. BENTON managers at the conference on the part of the House.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE BURKE.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, I believe a time this afternoon was set for eulogies on Mr. BURKE of Texas, late a member of the House of Representatives. The Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] has sent word to me that he is sick and unable to be here, and that he desires that the memorial services be postponed until a week from to-day. In his behalf I ask unanimous consent that the order made for this afternoon with regard to the death of Representative BURKE may be postponed until next Saturday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the order heretofore made with regard to eulogies upon the late Representative BURKE, from the State of Texas, be postponed until one week from to-day. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order will be made.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE RUSSELL.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I ask that there be laid before the Senate the resolutions from the House of Representatives relating to the death of Hon. CHARLES A. RUSSELL, late a Representative from the State of Connecticut.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions of the House of Representatives will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, January 25, 1903.

Resolved, That, in pursuance of the special order heretofore adopted, the House proceed to pay tribute to the memory of Hon. CHARLES A. RUSSELL, late a member of the House of Representatives from the State of Connecticut.

Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, and in recognition of his eminent abilities as a faithful and distinguished public servant, the House, at the conclusion of the memorial proceedings of this day, shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk be, and is hereby, instructed to send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I present the resolutions which I send to the desk, and ask for their adoption.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. CHARLES A. RUSSELL, late a Representative from the State of Connecticut.

Resolved, That the business of the Senate be now suspended, in order that fitting tribute be paid to his memory.

Resolved, That as an additional mark of respect the Senate, at the conclusion of these ceremonies, do adjourn.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, CHARLES ADDISON RUSSELL, who represented the Third Congressional district of Connecticut for sixteen years, a period exceeding in length of service that of any predecessor, died at his home in Killingly, Conn., on the 23d day of October, 1902. I speak of him to-day as an honored colleague and a much-loved friend.

Mr. RUSSELL was born in Worcester, Mass., March 2, 1852. His father, Isaiah Dunster Russell, was a merchant of that city, and his mother was Nancy M. [Wentworth] Russell. His ancestry was of the best, being a descendant through his father of Isaiah Dunster, who was the first president of Harvard College, and through his mother of Benning Wentworth, who, in the early history of that State, was governor of New Hampshire. His great-grandfather, Jason Russell, was killed on the 19th of April, 1775, in his own doorway, by the British on their retreat from Lexington and Concord. Thus by heredity he united in his character scholarly attainment, civic tendency, and patriotic ardor.

Mr. RUSSELL'S parents were not rich, neither were they poor. His advantages were only those of the well-born New England boy, whose future is to be fixed by self-effort. Energy, determination, and aspiration are the chief characteristics of such boys, and these first manifested themselves in the case of young RUSSELL when he became a carrier of morning newspapers.

It is impossible to fully and justly analyze the effect of early surroundings upon life and character, and no one may even now clearly see how much of the future man was due to the daily work of the carrier boy, who, in the pure New England atmosphere and mid the peculiar New England environments, faithfully, morning by morning, delivered the papers along his route, year in and year out, thereby earning the first money for self-support and development. There was in that work the element of faithfulness which so marked his whole career.

He had the ordinary educational advantages which the place of his birth afforded. He entered the high school; prepared for college; was matriculated at Yale, and graduated in 1873. After graduation he engaged in newspaper work, becoming a member of the editorial staff of the Worcester Press; was also connected with the Worcester Spy, and was correspondent for New York and Boston daily papers.

On May 14, 1879, Mr. RUSSELL married Miss Ella Frances Sayles, daughter of Sabin L. Sayles, a prominent woolen manufacturer of Killingly, Conn. A most hearty and generous welcome was extended by Connecticut to the young man from Massachusetts, and from the very day he took up his residence in our State he was thought of only as a Connecticut man; he soon attracted the attention and confidence of the people. In 1881 and 1882 he was a member of the governor's staff, and then chosen to the legislature. In 1885 he was elected secretary of state, and in 1886 was nominated and elected to Congress. He served as Representative eight successive terms, and had been enthusiastically renominated for a ninth.

I need not speak in detail of his career in the House of Representatives. He constantly grew in the estimation of his associates until at the time of his death I think I may say without qualification that no member was more respected, trusted, honored, or loved than he. His colleagues relied upon his sound judgment and his clear perception of what was best for the country and the people. He never assumed to be a leader, and yet he was in the truest and best sense a real leader. He never posed for admiration or applause, but he was a man of unwavering purpose, ever going straight forward to accomplishment. Real leadership is seldom achieved by mere eloquence or oratory. The orator gains applause, but does not often influence greatly the judgment of his hearers.

Thorough and complete understanding of problems and policies, an honest, unflinching, confidence-inspiring purpose, constitute the qualities which make up real leadership. These characteristics Mr. RUSSELL possessed in an eminent degree. When men were in doubt they turned to him, because they knew that he had mastered both the principles and the details involved in proposed legislation; they knew him to be unselfish and true, and for these reasons they followed him. In times of uncertainty and danger, of complication and embarrassment, they sought his advice and direction. It was in critical situations that his influence was most marked.

When the sea is smooth and the wind is fair almost any seaman can sail the ship, but in the storm, amid billows and breakers, the skillful pilot must take the helm. His colleagues recognized in Mr. RUSSELL a skillful pilot; many a time he brought the ship safely through the storm. Still he was a most modest man; he never thrust himself to the front; he was unassuming, retiring, but never distrustful of himself. His speeches did not occupy a large space in the RECORD, and when, all too infrequently, he did speak there was no suggestion of self-consciousness or self-seeking in what he said; he spoke as he thought, with decision, directness, and force. What he said carried conviction and formulated opinion in others.

He was a rare man. It is difficult to single out from the many estimable gifts of his mind and heart one more conspicuous than another. If I might venture to do so, I would say that the most striking quality with which he was endowed was that of faithfulness—faithfulness to his work, his duty, his constituents, his country, his friends, his family. It is hard to tell just what it is in a man that makes others love him. There must be more than mere attractiveness to produce friendship and love. I have never known a man more beloved by those who knew him than Mr. RUSSELL. I tried in his lifetime, and have tried since his death to determine what it was in him that brought about such universal affection for him, and I think it was more than anything else this quality of faithfulness of which I have spoken. In the closing book of the New Testament may be found the injunction, which rings with inspiration, "Be ye faithful unto death." It seems to me that Mr. RUSSELL during all his life, and even to his latest hours, perfectly fulfilled this command.

During the last session of Congress which he attended, friends marked with apprehension the steady, stealthy footsteps of the disease to which he finally succumbed, but he never faltered in his work; sometimes it seemed as if he were staggering to his fall, but with unusual courage braced himself to go on. When compelled at last to relinquish his toil here and seek rest elsewhere, he insisted, while on his way to the train which was to bear him finally away from the scene of his labors, upon stopping to do a departmental service for a friend who was not a constituent. This touching incident illustrates his faithfulness as scarcely anything else could. He entered Congress a youthful man; he left it in the prime of his life, when it seemed as if greater honors and opportunities for usefulness were just ahead of him, as if he could not be spared by his district, his State, his country, his friends, or his loved ones, and yet his was a rounded and, as we look at it now, a complete life.

To live truly and nobly and to die beloved—what more can there be to that which we call life? And, after all, if our faith is not misplaced, his life has but begun. We part from dying friends with sad and breaking hearts; but why should we? With the assurance that this brief stay here is but preliminary to a better, happier, and grander life, why should we mourn when the spirit leaves the body? Our hearts do not break when we part with friends who set sail for a foreign country, from which we have no reason to expect their return. We realize, indeed, that we shall see their faces no more, but we cherish them in our hearts as still living, still enjoying, still doing; that we may thus cherish the friends who have passed from our sight into a new world makes life worth living and shuts out despair.

Parting with my colleague, my comrade, and my dear friend, I repeat the words of David when he mourned for Jonathan: "Very pleasant hast thou been unto me; thy love to me was wonderful, passing the love of woman;" and I hold fast to my faith that he still lives, that he still loves me as I love him.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, it seems to me proper that I should drop a modest flower on the grave of Mr. RUSSELL, for through his entire public life we were intimate friends. Here in Washington we lived at the same hotel, in adjoining rooms. I have been a guest at his home. I have been associated with him in political campaigns. The last summer of his life he was my near neighbor at the seashore, where he was striving to regain strength and health. I thought that the contest there was an unequal one and that he would be vanquished, but he was patient, courageous, and hopeful.

Mr. President, it is a pathetic picture, that of a man comparatively young, who had been strong and vigorous, fighting a battle for life. Shortly after, Mr. RUSSELL died. It undoubtedly occured to most of us who were his friends that his death was premature. But was it? The speech just made by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] answers that question. It was not premature. The true measure of life is not length of years. It is achievements accomplished in the years which God gives us.

William McKinley did not reach the three score years and ten, but he was a soldier, a statesman, a member of the National House of Representatives, governor of his State, President of the Republic. He was, living beloved, and dying mourned by more men and more women than ever loved or mourned any other man. Was not that life a rounded one?

A few days since in this Chamber memorial exercises were held over one of our late colleagues, the Senator from Michigan, Mr. McMillan. Read those eulogies—evidently sincere, in no sense exaggerated—and then tell me, Was not that life complete?

Judged by that standard, the life of CHARLES A. RUSSELL was in no sense a failure. He had the affection and confidence of his people. He served them in their assembly, was their secretary of state, was elected by them nine times to the National House of Representatives. In that great body, where competition and rivalry are always intense, where one wears only what one wins and never any more, he secured a conspicuous position and was recognized as a man of strength and power. He served on many important committees, and at the time of his death was a member of the "Ways and Means." He was regarded as an authority on all questions of revenue. He was constant in his attendance on the House and in committee, and the natural result of that followed—he was a potent factor in legislation.

He was a good debater. He never wasted words, never talked to the galleries, but his speeches were always made to the subject under discussion—concise, logical, forcible—and they commanded the attention of the House. As a platform orator, he was graceful in manner, agreeable in presence, with a pleasant voice, with convictions and ever the courage of them, honest and forcible in utterance, and he invariably commanded the confidence and attention of his audiences.

As a citizen of Connecticut he early gained the confidence and affection of his fellow-citizens to a most extraordinary degree, regardless of party affiliations, though he himself was a strong party man. He favored by precept and example everything calculated to promote the public welfare, to elevate and improve the condition of the people, to promote religion, education, and temperance.

In his own home he was delightful, sunny, cheerful, loving his fireside better than any other place in the world. He was a devoted husband, an affectionate and indulgent father. Death has made that home desolate indeed.

Mr. President, such sad experiences as these, coming upon us so frequently, ought to admonish each one of us. God's ways are not ours. Each one of us is to cross "The Covered Bridge" at His will, not our own. We have left to us submission to that Divine will and the duty of honest, constant, vigilant endeavor for every day the dear Lord gives us.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, Mr. RUSSELL and I entered Congress at the same time. He was a native of my State and there received his early education. He graduated at Yale soon after I graduated from Harvard. We had, therefore, many associations in common when we first met in Washington, and the friendship then formed was never broken. My contemporary in age and in public service, his untimely death was to me a very personal sorrow, but the sense of personal loss, however deep, is, on an occasion like this, overshadowed by that of the larger loss which has come to the State and nation which Mr. RUSSELL served so faithfully, so well, and with so much distinction.

He brought to his public service strong character, high principles, the thorough education of one of our great universities, and the practical training which came from the management of a large industry in a great industrial community.

Sir Henry Taylor's familiar aphorism that "The world knows nothing of its greatest men" is one of those cheerful falsehoods in which failure finds consolation. But there is much truth in the modified proposition that the world often knows too little of its most useful men. This is especially the case in public life when a man is quiet and modest as Mr. RUSSELL always was, and possesses slight aptitude, if not positive distaste, for the arts of self-advertisement. It is an ancient saying that if you can make the songs of a nation it matters not who makes their laws, and it too often happens that song and speech and writings obscure the labors of those who, with toil and diligence at once incessant and obscure, build up the statutes which embody a nation's policy and which touch the business and prosperity of all the men and women who dwell within her borders.

Mr. RUSSELL'S work, for which he deserves not only remembrance but the gratitude of the country and of his own State, was essentially that of a lawmaker. For sixteen years he represented in Congress a district composed of a substantial and prosperous New England population; a district with varied industries which demanded the constant and faithful watchfulness of one who thoroughly understood them. He guarded those interests jealously, yet without losing sight of the broader relationship which a Representative in Congress bears to districts and States other than his own. At the time of his death he had been for many years an influential member of the Committee on Ways and Means, and while a member of that committee he bore a conspicuous part in framing the tariff law which is now upon the statute book and under which the country has enjoyed a prosperity and witnessed an expansion of trade such as it has never known before.

Just how much of the effectiveness of that measure is due to his painstaking labor and clear intelligence it is hard to say, for the work of a committee is done behind closed doors. That which we surely know is that Mr. RUSSELL was the trusted lieutenant of Mr. Dingley, who leaned upon him in those days of harassing responsibility more heavily perhaps than upon any other man. Mr. RUSSELL was in a peculiar sense the representative of New England at that period. The industries of Massachusetts, I know, turned to him as freely as the industries of his own State. They found in him a willing, patient, and never-tiring friend. He labored day by day and night by night upon dry schedules and wearying statistics without complaint, and in the full knowledge that the work he performed had in it for him no personal gain and little opportunity for the reputation which glitters in the newspapers and that his only lasting reward must be the consciousness of duty done.

He was not an orator, and made no pretense of being one. He could state a proposition clearly and effectively. His sincerity carried conviction, and he was satisfied with that. The higher flights of oratory he never undertook, and the merely superficial fame that comes to a ready and attractive public speaker he never sought. He was content if he could see the measures he advocated meet with success, no matter whether he received individual credit or not. His public service was thus marked by an unselfishness which is by no means common. The influence he exerted quietly in a body where unobtrusive helpfulness counts for much was very great indeed. He was looked up to by his associates as a wise and safe adviser, with great strength of character and a fine capacity for accomplishing results.

He was an educated man of business. He had the breadth of view which is fostered by a college training, and the practical sense which comes from business experience. He understood well the true relationship of business to public affairs. Although he had been so long in public life he really stood at the threshold of what promised to be a continued career of ever-broadening usefulness. His death was premature for his country and his friends, for he was in the fullness of his powers and we all hoped and believed that larger fields of achievement and a wider fame were opening before him.

The country has lost in him an honorable, able, skillful, and laborious legislator, the State of Connecticut a distinguished and faithful representative, and those who knew him a beloved and honored friend.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, it is proper that the Senate should lay aside the ordinary public duties, no matter how important or pressing they may be, for the purpose of paying a last tribute of respect to the memory of one who has been a faithful, capable, and honored public servant, and to place upon the record of the proceedings of this body, to last until "time shall be no more," our sense of the public loss in the death of such a man.

If it was ever true that the good which men do is "oft' interred with their bones," it is not so now. The example of a good man lives after him, and long after he ceases to take a part amongst his fellowmen the good he did during his life will be effective for good and valuable to those who are to follow him.

I believe that men grow better, more benevolent, more unselfish, and more public-spirited with the spread of intelligence and the advancement of civilization and enlightenment. The distrust of and hostility toward each other which characterized men and nations in past ages, which embarrassed and hampered all advancement and intercourse, have happily been largely broken down, and the result is that we are rapidly approaching the time dreamed of by poets, in which it will be said that—

> The war-drum throbb'd no longer, and the battle-flags were furl'd
> In the Parliament of man, the Federation of the world.

Mr. RUSSELL and I differed as widely as possible in our ideas of governmental policy. We lived in sections of the country remote from each other. We each doubtless had something of the prejudices which naturally sprung from our environments, but it is a pleasure to me now to say that in all my intercourse with him I always found in him such sterling worth in his private life and public work as commanded my great respect and admiration.

He was tenacious of his opinions, certainly, but this was because they were the honest convictions of a deliberate and strong judgment, arrived at after careful consideration; and while I did not always agree to his conclusions, I knew he was sincere in his beliefs. While he held his convictions as strongly as any man, he was always tolerant of the opinions of those who differed from him, because he believed firmly in the great natural right of all men to think and speak for themselves on all questions and to follow the dictates of their own judgments and consciences.

It is well for us individually, as well as a nation, and for the future of mankind, that this spirit of toleration of freedom of thought and speech should have so strong a hold as it has on the great body of the American people; for this mutual regard for the honest convictions which characterizes those who differ will always advance the cause of truth and honest investigation in any field of human thought.

There ran in his veins the blood of men who were eminent in their day as leaders of thought and of men, and he, by his private life and public career, added luster to his family history. Though he was comparatively a young man he had accomplished much; he had, in fact, but just reached the prime and vigor of his intellectual strength, and if he had been permitted to fill out his full three score years and ten his whole life would doubtless have been full of usefulness. That which must come to us all has come to him. His work is ended; his career is closed, and his friends have the satisfaction of knowing that he did his full duty and did it well.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, the story of the well-rounded life of CHARLES A. RUSSELL, which has been so eloquently described by my distinguished friend from Connecticut, I will not attempt to follow. But I will try to pay in a few words a brief tribute to the memory of a man whom I knew in my younger days and in these later days.

He and I were students together at Yale—he an upper classman, I an under one. Naturally upper classmen do not associate very much with under classmen; but I knew him then well, and the acquaintance which we formed at that time he and I kept up to the time of his death. I came to the Fiftieth Congress not a new member, because I had been in the Forty-eighth Congress, and he and I renewed in the Fiftieth Congress the friendship we had formed in youth. It was always a pleasure to me to meet him. I admired his ability, and I admired his character, for, as has been so well said by the Senator from Connecticut, he was always faithful. He was a man on whom one could rely in every way, and when he said that he would do a thing he always did it. The best tribute I think that can be paid to his memory is to say that he was faithful.

Representing a district of great and diversified industries, he knew what it was to deal with different matters and large measures, and how well he did this is best answered by the result of his work. He possessed qualitied which singled him out among men to do these things. He had not only extraordinary ability but unusual qualifications for the responsibilities that were thrown upon him.

He was attractive in manner, cheerful in disposition, and endowed with great perseverance. He possessed a kindness of heart which brought to him many friends and helped him in performing the duties which he did so well. He was for more than sixteen years a member of the House of Representatives, and Connecticut and the people of the United States will miss his services to-day. He added another to the distinguished names which are on the roll of honor which Connecticut has furnished to the history of this country.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President, I can not permit this occasion to pass without joining the Senator from Connecticut and others in paying a brief tribute of respect to the memory of CHARLES A. RUSSELL, with whom it was my good fortune to be so long associated in the House of Representatives and to whom I became strongly attached during the years of our service together in that body.

I met Mr. RUSSELL to know him for the first time when he took his seat in the National House of Representatives in 1887 as a member of the Fiftieth Congress from the State of Connecticut. I served with him continuously from that time until 1895, a period of eight years, when my connection with that body terminated, and during those years of daily association I necessarily came to know him well, and formed an attachment for him for his manly virtues and admirable traits of character which will remain with me a pleasing memory to the end.

He entered the House unheralded, although he had held many positions of trust and responsibility in his State, and took the places assigned him on committees without criticism or complaint, and set to work in the conscientious performance of every duty committed to his charge, whether of trifling or great concern, with an intelligence and fidelity which insured the success which readily awaited him. He never sought to exploit himself or inclined his head to catch, if possible, the echoes of popular applause. To all these things he was apparently indifferent, solicitous only for the approval of his own conscience and the commendation of his best judgment.

Modest, unobtrusive, and retiring, he always seemed devoted to and absorbed in the work he had in hand, with no other thought than to reach such a result as would advance the interests of his State and the weal of his country. To my mind he was an ideal public servant, sinking self and exalting only the great principles of his political faith. He builded his public life on the only sure and enduring foundation—personal integrity and fidelity to duty.

Step by step, cautiously, but surely, without brag or bluster, he made his way from an humble beginning to a commanding position on the Committee on Ways and Means, where his business training, clear discernment, and sound judgment contributed in no small degree to that legislation the fruits of which the nation is now gathering in such abundance. But higher and more enduring than these, by his daily bearing in private and public life he made his way to the respect and confidence of the House, and by his genial, lovable nature he made his way to the hearts of all his associates, where his memory will be forever enshrined.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, circumstances made me entirely familiar with the life and public services of Mr. RUSSELL. The district which he represented so long and so well adjoins Rhode Island on the west. I became familiar with the character of the people of the district—an ideal, prosperous New England community—as the early years of my boyhood were spent in the town in which Mr. RUSSELL lived. I was naturally interested in the young man who sixteen years ago came to Washington as their Representative. My acquaintance with him, which commenced at that time, led to a friendship which continued until his death.

Early in his service in the House Mr. RUSSELL was placed upon the Committee on Ways and Means, and representing as we did similar communities and with a service on similar committees, we naturally had conferences on public questions. I learned to admire the qualities which distinguished Mr. RUSSELL among his associates, his fidelity to principle; his industry, which never tired; his devotion to the interests of his people and to the country, which were never questioned.

The two men who were most conspicuous in the Committee of Ways and Means of the House of Representatives in the preparation of the great tariff act of 1897 have now passed away. To what extent his unremitting labors in this connection were responsible for his final breaking down of health no man can tell. He brought to the labors of those long, weary months of preparation an intelligent knowledge and appreciation of vast numbers of important questions involved in the work of tariff revision.

He had at all times the full confidence of his associates.

Through these and similar associations I came to know Mr. RUSSELL well, and I have never known in public life a more thorough and absolute devotion to the highest ideals of public service than were to be found in the late Representative from Connecticut.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, as there are other eulogies to follow, I ask that the further consideration of the resolutions which I introduced may be passed by for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, I offer the resolutions which I send to the desk, and ask for their adoption.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey offers resolutions which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of the Hon. JOSHUA S. SALMON, a Representative from the State of New Jersey.

Resolved, That the business of the Senate be now suspended in order that fitting tributes be paid to his memory.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect at the conclusion of these exercises the Senate do adjourn.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, the Hon. JOSHUA S. SALMON, a Representative from the old Fourth district of New Jersey, to whose memory we devote this hour, was an exemplification of American manhood. He was the type of man of which this country is made and the type which has made this country great. His sphere of activity was limited, but he exhausted almost all it had to offer.

He was born near Mount Olive, in the county of Morris, February 2, 1846, where his family had been settled for more than a century. His ancestors were of sturdy Scotch origin, one branch coming to this country as early as 1640. Mr. SALMON was educated in the schools surrounding his home, and after passing successfully through them he finished his education by graduating from the Albany Law School with a degree of bachelor of laws in 1873. After remaining in the law office of Charles E. Schofield, of Jersey City, for some time he returned to his home and began the practice of his profession. He retained his principal office in Boonton until the time of his death.

Mr. SALMON was eminently qualified for the practice of law. His address was pleasing, his voice clear and agreeable, his manner gentle, and yet there was a reserve of strength that impressed but did not disturb those who met him. He was a careful man and made most of his opportunities. He did not waste his time, but studied his profession, and as a practitioner met with the success that always attends abilities of which he was possessed. He was counsel in a number of important cases in New Jersey and attracted considerable attention in several which he won.

From the time of his admission to the bar Mr. SALMON took an interest in the politics of his county. In 1876 he was elected to the city council and was retained in that office for six years. In 1877 he was elected to the State legislature. From 1880 to 1893 he was counsel to the board of chosen freeholders of Morris County, and he was also counsel for a number of townships in Morris County. He was the Democratic candidate for State senator in 1883, but was unsuccessful.

He was nominated by the Democrats of the Fourth Congressional district October 6, and was elected to the Fifty-sixth Congress. He was again elected to the Fifty-seventh, but died on May 6, 1902, in the prime of his life.

Mr. SALMON was beloved by everyone who knew him in his native town and the surrounding country. Generous and charitable, he stood high in the social and business circles of the city and county and was a devout and earnest communicant of the Presbyterian Church. He was a man in whom everyone had confidence. His open frankness, calm, impressive manner, resourcefulness, and tact invited people to call upon him for guidance.

While true to party principles he was never prejudiced or bitter in discussion with his opponents; modest and retiring, yet strong and persistent when he thought he was in the right.

His work in the House of Representatives was good, as has been testified to by his colleagues, and was earnest and faithful in all matters intrusted to him. He carefully investigated all subjects of public interest before acting upon his judgment. He was the type of careful man of which this country has many and of which it is proud.

He sleeps, Mr. President, among the historic hills of Morris County, and the people of Morris County and of the Fourth Congressional district mourn his loss.

Mr. DRYDEN. Mr. President, the flag which floats so often at half-mast over the halls of Congress, the vacant chairs in either Chamber, made so by the Great Reaper, the half-finished work which falls from the hands made nerveless by death, all remind us of the forcefulness of the exclamation of Burke, What shadows we are and what shadows we pursue!

Mr. SALMON is an exemplification of this. He fell in the maturity of his life, when by his training, his acquirements, his ability, much yet remained, had his life been spared, of usefulness to his country. Born, educated, reared, and dying as he did, in a single county of New Jersey, truly and fitly he represented the sentiments of the people of his section.

Our lives are shaped and our characters are molded by the environments which surround us, and so Mr. SALMON, coming from an ancestry which runs back for a period of more than a hundred years in the honored State of New Jersey, naturally, inevitably, imperceptibly, it may be, had imbibed the sentiments of that State, and his character was formed upon its high ideals of moral integrity, and as such he moved and lived amongst his people.

He was a modest man. He made no attempt at display. There was nothing spectacular or dramatic in his life. He never attempted to carve his name high upon the shaft of fame. Yet in his walk he was faithful to his private and public duties. He performed conscientiously and well whatever was assigned to him; and after all it is upon such a life and such lives as Mr. SALMON led that the country must rely for its welfare, for its honor, for its security.

He was beloved by his neighbors. He was spoken of as a good man and as a friend of the people; and having performed his work in an unostentatious way, it is fitting that his mortal remains should rest in the beautiful hills of Morris County, N. J.

The approaching spring will soon cover those hills with a fresh verdure, and nature will bring forth from the trees and shrubs the buds and flowers which perfume the air; but none of these will be more beautiful or more lovely than the memory of Mr. SALMON, which is enshrined in the hearts of his friends and neighbors at Boonton.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, I make the same request as that made by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], that the resolutions may be temporarily laid aside for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered in the absence of objection.

Resolved, That the business of the Senate be now suspended in order that fitting tribute be paid to his memory.

Resolved, That Senators be permitted to print remarks upon the life and character of AMOS J. CUMMINGS.

Resolved, That as an additional mark of respect the Senate, at the conclusion of these ceremonies, do adjourn.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, there are many of both parties who knew AMOS J. CUMMINGS and loved him who would have joined in this tribute had not the lateness of the session and the pressure of business made it impossible for them to secure the time to do so; but I could not let this session adjourn without having entered in imperishable memorial upon the Journal of the Senate a minute of respect for one of the best men who ever served in the House of Representatives—a man of singular career and of most varied experiences, one of those original geniuses who seldom make a success, and therefore the success of one of them is all the more remarkable and commendable.

There are very few Americans who never, at any period in their lives, had a desire to accumulate a fortune, but AMOS J. CUMMINGS was one of them. He seemed to be, during all his active career, a child of impulse and of circumstance. He acted many parts, but such was his genius, his power of concentration, and his ability, that in each part he forged to the front and made himself conspicuous. A brief review of what he did will exhibit these peculiarities.

His father and his grandfather were both clergymen. He was brought up and had the training which comes in the home of a village pastor, and yet so restless was his spirit that it could not brook the restraints of home or of school and he became an apprentice in the composing room of a newspaper.

As soon as he had learned his trade the roving spirit would no longer let him remain at home, and it was one of the recollections of his life that he had set type in every State in the Union. This gave him, long before he came of age, a wonderful knowledge of the country and a remarkable acquaintance with the people of the different States of the Republic.

Happening to be at Mobile when General Walker started upon his expedition for the conquest of Nicaragua, this restless spirit was at once captured by the adventurer and the adventure. We shall never know whether Walker was a buccaneer, a pirate, a patriot, or what. We only know he started with 61 men to capture the friendly Republic of Nicaragua.

It is one of the evidences of the enormous advance of this country in a recognition of international rights and of how far an American citizen can go in violation of those rights that the expedition of Walker, widely advertised, the recruiting known at Washington and everywhere else, was permitted to start for the purpose of making an assault upon the integrity and independence of a friendly power. That could not happen to-day under any conditions. It would be suppressed at once. The expedition ended, of course, at last in disaster. But in it were a multitude of extraordinary experiences which would form a romance if AMOS CUMMINGS had ever had the time to write of them.

When he came back to New York he entered the composing room of the New York Tribune. In a short time he had attracted the personal attention of Horace Greeley, who advanced him to a position on the editorial staff.

Then he fell again into the editorial line as the managing editor of the New York Sun, under Charles A. Dana. When the mob threatened to wreck the Tribune building in the draft riots of 1863, it would have done so had it not been for CUMMINGS. The remarkable facility of this man to adapt himself to all circumstances captured and dispersed that crowd of raving lunatics.

Then he joined the Army during the civil war as a soldier in a New Jersey regiment. At the battle of Chancellorsville, when his battery had been taken and the regiment was on the run, he seized from the dying color bearer the colors, and rushing back with them alone shamed the regiment, so that they followed him and recaptured the battery, for which he received the thanks of Congress and a medal, which was the ornament that he loved best of all during the whole of his life.

He became not only facile with the pen, but developed as a speaker and turned to the platform; his party wanted him in its campaigns; the dinner tables of the metropolis found that he was a charming addition to the after-dinner speaking.

Here you have this varied career. He entered Congress; he was there for fifteen years, and he so impressed himself upon his associates that he received the extraordinary honor, very few times granted, of being awarded a public funeral on the floor of the House.

It was my good fortune to know CUMMINGS from his early beginnings down to the day of his death. I often wonder what are the influences and environments that most make up a character or shape a career. CUMMINGS never had any settled purpose for any career, but he just dropped into his ideal of the hour and then marched on with it and its adherents so long as he felt that his line of duty was just there.

The wonder is that this roving young printer, under 16 years of age, falling into all sorts of associations everywhere, this youth of 17, a comrade with those wild adventurers of every nationality who were without character, without any regard for law, international or national, or morality, or anything else, as were his associates in the Walker expedition; going through the civil war while still so young—that in all of these associations and all of these temptations the real fiber of manhood, which was the heredity of two generations of clergymen, left him at the end untouched by any of the temptations which must have surrounded a young man under such circumstances.

The character and career of AMOS J. CUMMINGS was not formed in the parsonage, nor in the composing room, nor in the associations with his friends, the printers, nor with the adventurers in Nicaragua, nor with his comrades in the Army. They were built by the overmastering influence of two men of extraordinary genius, whom he worshiped—one Horace Greeley, the other Charles A. Dana.

No proper appreciation of the life and services, of the ability and character of Horace Greeley has ever been written. There was a time, and fortunately for Mr. CUMMINGS he was then on the Tribune staff and learning from the great master, when there came every day from the Tribune office a newspaper with editorials written by that pen which influenced the judgment of millions, which controlled the action of parties, and dominated the legislation of the country.

The most guileless man I ever knew, the most simple, the most credulous, the most unworldly, and yet with a pen in his hand the strongest and wisest, was Horace Greeley. One can imagine the influence of such a character upon such an impressionable youth and one of such a make-up as AMOS J. CUMMINGS.

I have seen many a deathbed in my life; I have witnessed life go out under conditions that were sad or sweet, hopeful or despairing. I never but once saw a man die of a broken heart, and never do I wish to see such a tragedy again.

I made a speech with Mr. Greeley in his Presidential campaign, just before its close. We spoke from the same platform, and both of us knew that he was to be beaten. We returned to his home, and he was jeered on the train and at the depot when we arrived. I was with him one day shortly before his death. We went into his study. It was littered with those famous caricatures of Nast, representing him as the embodiment of all that was evil or vile in expression or practice in life.

Mr. Greeley glanced them over, and then he said: "My life is a failure; I never have sought to accumulate fortune; I never have cared for fame; but I did want to leave a monument of what I had done for my fellow-men, in lifting them up, in doing away with the curse of slavery and the curse of rum; but here I am so caricatured and misrepresented to my countrymen that the slave will always look upon me as having been one of his owners, and reform will believe me a fraud." Then, his head falling upon his desk, he burst into uncontrollable sobs. The brain that had done such splendid work snapped. He was soon after taken to an asylum, where he died. His heart literally broke at the moment when he bowed his head upon his desk.

Another man who subsequently had influence on the life and in molding the work and character of AMOS J. CUMMINGS was Charles A. Dana. Mr. Dana was of an entirely different type from Horace Greeley, a man of large and broad culture, of wide reading and extensive travel, of experience in literature and in the world—a man of the world, familiar with the public men of all nations and of the great writers of all countries and of all times—not only an editor, but himself a writer of eminence in other walks of literature. He possessed the quality beyond any newspaper man I have ever known of compressing in a sentence an article which filled a column; of putting in one paragraph a thought which, expanded by others, would have been dissipated by its length; but in a paragraph it became the quotable truth for every newspaper in the country, and was often reproduced as a condensed expression in the platform of a party.

Through the whole of AMOS J. CUMMINGS'S subsequent career we see the influence of these two great men, about whom he was always talking and who were his idols. The tremendous, rushing, resistless, Niagara forces of Horace Greeley were in the impulses which moved him; but at the same time in the articles that came from his pen you could see the results of the criticism and teaching which he received while he was editor of the Sun from his master, Charles A. Dana.

Mr. CUMMINGS became a member of the House of Representatives at that moment when there seemed to have come like an inspiration, and almost in an hour, the idea to the people of the United States and to Congress that we must have a powerful Navy. It had been seen by American statesmen for a generation that such a Navy must be built, but the spirit of economy had resisted it always as unnecessary because of the strength of our isolation. But the first year that CUMMINGS was in Congress this idea suddenly and almost as an electric spark permeated the whole Republic. It caught at once upon a mind which had been trained and a life which had been led as had that of our friend. He secured a position upon the Naval Committee. He was during most of his career in the party of the opposition, and yet the Navy, as it is to-day, owes much to the consistent, persistent, able, and patriotic support of this Representative from New York.

He had one other aim, one other absorption, and that was with him always. He became a member early in life of the Typographical Union. I have been, from my occupation and associations necessarily a student of and brought into intimate contact with labor organizations. One of the best labor organizations in the world, full of beneficence, commanding the respect of everybody, and doing infinite good for its own members, is the one with which I was most closely brought in contact for many years as president of the New York Central Railway Company—the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers. Alongside of them is the Typographical Union, of whom I have had much knowledge, though not business relations.

As a member, a lecturer, and an associate in this body, CUMMINGS became familiar with the ideas underlying labor unions, with the best purposes which they had, and with that which was best which could be accomplished by voluntary efforts, or which should be enacted into legislation. Much of the legislation on the statute books of the United States for the last fifteen years in behalf of labor owes its position there to the intelligent efforts of this labor man and exponent, in its best and highest sense, of labor.

Mr. CUMMINGS cultivated the faculty—which very few hard-working men possess—of always having plenty of time for anything. Plenty of time for play, for excursions, for social enjoyment with those he loved and who loved him, plenty of time to appear at the banquet hall where the occasion was patriotic or purely social, or for the advancement of some special purpose, and plenty of time to deliver an address, which was in the next day's paper one of the features of the evening. He could do beyond most men I have ever met that most difficult task of amusing a crowd which is assembled under such conditions late in the evening, and at the same time through the fun, joke, and story of weaving a thread of pregnant truths which left an impress which did not die with the flowers of the feast.

In standing beside the open grave of a friend one thought often occurs to me in later years, and that is: What does the world owe this man and how much of the debt has he collected? The world owes to every man a living, providing he has the industry and determination to collect it. The world owes to every man more pleasure than pain; more good than bad; more gain than loss; more happiness than sorrow; more success than failure; more love than hate; more friends than enemies; but it rests with the man himself whether he collects that debt, for the world holds fast to the good things which it possesses and lets free the bad; and it is only by labor and energy, only by determination and character that the debt which the world owes to everyone is collected. But as I stood beside the bier of my old friend, AMOS J. CUMMINGS, as I looked over his life as a printer, an editor, an author, a soldier, and a statesman, and then contemplated his inner life in his home and among his friends, I felt that in his sixty-one years of varied activities he had collected the debt which the world owed him; that he had to his account a large credit of fame, of good wishes, and of loving regrets, and that he found a large credit to his account in the great book of life when he joined the majority.

Mr. PLATT of New York. Mr. President, my voice has never been heard on this floor in eulogium of the dead; but the life of our departed friend, Hon. AMOS J. CUMMINGS, exhibits so much of interest, and he was withal so universally beloved and respected, not only by his friends and associates, but as well by those opposed to him politically, that I can not refrain from availing myself of this opportunity of paying a simple tribute of respect to his memory and expressing admiration of his superior qualities.

Mr. President, the man who, in the face of poverty and all that is implied in that inexorable term, carves out for himself in the short span of sixty-one years so distinctive a position in the national view as that attained by Mr. CUMMINGS, deserves the highest tributes that tongues can paint or imaginations can conceive. He left the priceless legacy of a good name, an enviable record of achievement, a wealth of good deeds happily and efficiently accomplished; and for me to recur to them briefly to-day can add but slight emphasis to their immortal effect upon human kind.

Others upon this floor and in the coordinate branch of this national legislative body have recited the record of this man in terms specific and appropriate, so that it becomes unnecessary for me to indulge in repetition, but I do desire on this occasion to touch upon those pronounced characteristics which stood out in his personality like promontories upon a rocky shore.

Mr. CUMMINGS throughout his life was a fighter. His was the typical struggle for existence. From his boyhood he fought through the conditions which obstruct material advancement, through wars, through political campaigns, through legislative contests, until the mortal combat in which he was finally worsted, only to eventually win the trophy of a lease upon the life eternal, equipped by the rich experience of a life here well spent. He fought with Walker in Nicaragua. He fought in the civil war in the Twenty-sixth New Jersey Volunteer Regiment, of which he became, through conscientious and valorous service, its sergeant-major, and at Fredericksburg and Chancellorsville, for exceptional gallantry, in which he braved a storm of bullets as he has since braved storms of ballots, he received a medal of honor and the thanks of Congress.

He fought his way into prominence in the field of journalism until, having attracted the attention of Mr. Greeley, he was placed in charge of the New York Weekly Tribune, and later became the managing editor of the New York Evening Sun. He fought through many a term in Congress and conducted his defensive and offensive campaign in the House of Representatives with a vigor, a fairness, and a sweetness of temper that inspired the admiration and respect of all his colleagues. It is a rare quality, Mr. President, which admits of a man engaging in desperate political and legislative combat and emerging with clean hands and a serene temper. It is a quality that stands out conspicuously in his life career. He was, moreover, a large man in his aggressiveness. Many a time has his strong battle-ax been wielded against his political associates when his consistent mind placed him at honest variance with their views, but in none of his contests did he inspire enmity; his attitude invariably bespoke respect.

And then, Mr. President, he was a lover. He loved his family, his friends, and, in fact, all humanity, with an ardor seldom equaled. His career is punctuated at every stage with a record of kind deeds, glorious performances, in the interest of the weaker brother. One of his eulogizers refers touchingly to his love for the lower orders of life—the birds, the flowers, the trees, the beauties of nature. These characteristics, Mr. President, denote the large man; the man whose love embraces not only those near to him, but extends throughout the length and breadth of the ocean of humanity, and then takes in as well all animate life, so that his emotions vibrate to the tune of the universe. He is the man, Mr. President, whose life is attuned to the divine and whose thoughts and acts ring with the music of the stars.

They tell us that he was an omnivorous reader; that he was a scholar, a littérateur; that his mind was stored with the good, the sublime things in classical art. This accounts for his splendid genius as a journalist, a debater, and an orator. He never touched a subject that he did not illumine. He never addressed an audience that he did not enlighten.

Consider these three qualities that I have referred to so casually to-day—the qualities of the fighter, the lover, and the cultured intellect; all wrought out by his indomitable will and aggression. Could any man be better equipped to achieve lasting results? Could any man leave a better, a more pure, a more exalted record of a life well spent?

He died after reaching the maximum of usefulness, the pinnacle of accomplishment, with the love, respect, and emulation of his fellow-men.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE CRUMP.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President, I ask to have laid before the Senate the resolutions of the House of Representatives on the death of Hon. ROUSSEAU O. CRUMP, late a Representative from the State of Michigan.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions of the House of Representatives will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, April 26, 1902.

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended that opportunity may be given for tribute to the memory of Hon. ROUSSEAU O. CRUMP, late a member of the House of Representatives from the State of Michigan.

Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, and in recognition of his eminent abilities as a distinguished public servant, the House, at the conclusion of these memorial proceedings, shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk be instructed to send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President, I offer the resolutions which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the resolutions submitted by the Senator from Michigan.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of the Hon. ROUSSEAU O. CRUMP, late a Representative from the State of Michigan.

Resolved, That the business of the Senate be now suspended in order that fitting tribute may be paid to the private and public virtues of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect the Senate, at the conclusion of these ceremonies, do adjourn.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President, for the second time during this Congress the State of Michigan has been called upon to mourn the loss of a Representative in the National Congress, and we pause a moment to-day in the midst of the pressing duties incident to the closing hours of this session to pay tribute to the memory of ROUSSEAU O. CRUMP, late a Representative in Congress from the Tenth district in Michigan. He was born in New York in 1843, of English parentage, and died in 1902 at the age of 59 years.

His entire life was devoted to business pursuits, and in 1881, after making ventures in Minnesota and other Western States, he settled in Bay City, Mich., which continued to be his home until the day of his death. He at once launched upon the business of manufacturing, and pursuing that vocation steadily for twenty years, accumulating a moderate fortune, he acquired a practical knowledge of affairs which served him well in the performance of the then unforeseen duties of after years. His business interests and occupation necessarily brought him in daily contact with the laboring people, of whom he was a large employer, and nothing more forceful exemplifies his kindly spirit and generosity than the fact that while the relations between capital and labor have sometimes been strained, such was his generous treatment of his men, and such their confidence in him, in his integrity and fair dealing, that he never had a strike in his factories. It was said of him that he was known throughout all northern Michigan as one of the fairest dealers with labor.

His men believed in him, and felt and realized that whatever their wages, their employer was dealing as liberally with them as the business would permit. It is probable the hold he thus acquired and retained upon the laboring people suggested his candidacy for public office, and the belief was that the laboring people not only of his own city, but of the district, would give him their united and enthusiastic support. In this calculation there was no mistake. He was elected alderman in his own ward for four years, twice chosen mayor of his home city, followed by an election to Congress from the Tenth Congressional district, composed of 15 counties, for four consecutive terms. These expressions of confidence evidence the hold he had upon his people, which he retained until the hour of his death. He redeemed the district from the domination of the opposition and held it with an ever-increasing majority.

Going with him through his district in several campaigns in which he was engaged, I was always impressed with the evidences on every hand of the attachment of the plain people, and they followed him with an abiding faith in his integrity of purpose and his goodness of heart. He was a member of many fraternal organizations, in all of which he was ever faithful to his obligations, and held an enviable position and proved himself worthy of all confidence. He was a Republican in his political faith, and while others at times were swept off their feet by public clamor, he steadily adhered to his party faith, never faltering or deviating from the line of his convictions. By his death the district he represented has lost a faithful public servant and his associates a valuable friend. I can not more fittingly close this brief tribute than by quoting the words of his pastor on the occasion of his funeral. Mr. Patchell said:

We are here to lay away what is left of one whom we knew as a man. I use the term advisedly, for it covers a creation of our God. We knew him last week as one who commanded the respect of the community for his uprightness, his nobility. The newspapers and his political friends knew him in public life better than I do, and he compelled their respect because he was a man. Only yesterday a sympathizing friend said, "If a man went to R. O. CRUMP and asked for a special favor and the latter could not grant it, his very refusal would be couched in such terms (and to refuse at all was evidently so hard for him) that one went away feeling that to have received that refusal were better than not to have asked at all."

Mr. CRUMP was a conspicuous man, too, for his home relations. He loved his home. It was his palace, the strength of his life. It was there that he found his greatest consolation, there that he found the inspiration and his strength to do. He was a man among men, but was the happiest when making those nearest to him happy. His last thoughts were of his home, and his favorite song was "Home, Sweet Home."

To the melody of that song his soul reposes to-day in its eternal home.

Mr. ALGER. Mr. President, it was my good fortune to know, quite intimately, ROUSSEAU O. CRUMP, former member of Congress from the Tenth district of my State.

He was one of those quiet, unostentatious, sterling men, who pursued his course in life with a firmness and a singleness of purpose that always brings success. His word and his bond were alike—always good.

He had the confidence of the people of his State and district, as shown by his election to Congress. By his energy he assisted very largely in the development of his State.

He was what America boasts of most—a self-made man.

When a man enters life's battle, lives uprightly, fills his allotted place with integrity, with force, with due regard for those with whom he associates, who puts forth his every energy to make himself useful to the State during that life, he has filled its measure to the brim

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I move the adoption of the several resolutions which have been considered this afternoon.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to, and (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, February 16, 1903, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, February 14, 1903.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read, corrected, and approved.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the sundry civil bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. TAWNEY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House bill 17202, the sundry civil appropriation bill. The reading of the bill has been completed.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask unanimous consent to return to page 24 to offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to return to page 24 of the bill to offer an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "dollars," in line 11, page 24, amend by inserting the following: "Mukilteo, Wash.: For the construction of a light-house and fog signal station at Mukilteo Point, near the city of Everett, Wash., $22,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the point of order, I want to ask the gentleman if this item has been authorized?

Mr. JONES of Washington. It has, and was signed by the President on January 9.

Mr. CANNON. Then it is not subject to a point of order. I would be glad if the gentleman would state where the lighthouse is.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It is near the city of Everett, about 2 miles from the city. It is very strongly recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. CANNON. That is north of Seattle?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. And on the Sound?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. And how large a city is it?

Mr. JONES of Washington. About 20,000 people.

Mr. CANNON. And the light is really a necessity?

Mr. JONES of Washington. It is a very great necessity.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 18, line 10, for the purpose of offering the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to return to page 18 for the purpose of offering an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 10, page 18, insert "Richmond, Va., post-office: For acquiring by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise the Shaffer property adjoining the present post-office, the sum of $100,000 in addition to the sum of $75,000 already appropriated."

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will allow me, as I want to make haste with the bill, the Committee on Appropriations did not include this item. It was an item which appeared in the last omnibus public building bill. In the hurry of reading the provision it seemed to us that it was not authorized, but upon a subsequent reading of the whole provision, in my judgment, it is authorized. If we had given that careful attention to it that really, perhaps, we ought to have, I am satisfied the bill would have carried the item.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia to return to page 18? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, in line 13 on page 14, I desire to correct the total.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment sent to the desk by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 14, page 13, strike out "nine thousand and seven" and insert "twelve thousand and five."

Mr. CANNON. Since this item was inserted in the bill there has come to us a supplementary estimate correcting a mistake. This item is to cover rent being paid at Los Angeles for Government officials; and the Department was in error in sending the estimate for the smaller amount.

The amendment of Mr. CANNON was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. I understand the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] desires now to call attention to his amendment.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call up the amendment——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers the amendment which the Clerk will read. [A pause.] The Chair will state that the draft of the amendment was given to the gentleman from Tennessee last evening and has not been returned to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the amend ment is published in the RECORD this morning; but I desire to offer it now in a modified form, so as to put a limitation upon the appropriation, if the Chair still holds that the amendment as originally offered is not in order. But before doing that, I wish to say that I have before me in print the existing law on the subject embraced in the amendment, and I am inclined to the opinion that that portion of my amendment which was objected to by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], and which the Chair held to be a change of existing law, is substantially the law now. In other words, the clause in my amendment upon which the point of order was made is almost a literal copy of the existing statute. If the Chair will refer to section 94 of the printing law of 1895, and compare the language of that section with the language used in the amendment, he will find that the amendment I offered is not obnoxious to the rule, for the reason assigned by the gentleman from Illinois. I ask the Chair to take the amendment which I have sent to the desk and observe the language, while I will read the language of the existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will first report the modified amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I do not desire to offer my amendment in a modified form if the Chair will hold that the amendment in its original form as I offered it is not obnoxious to the rule. I ask the Chair to keep his eye on the language of the amendment, while I read from the provision which is at present a part of the existing law, as embraced in section 94 of the act of 1895:

SEC. 94. No head of any executive department, or of any bureau, branch, or office of the Government shall cause to be printed, nor shall the Public Printer print any document or matter, except that which is authorized by law and necessary to the public business; and executive officers, before transmitting their annual reports, shall carefully examine the same and all accompanying documents, and exclude therefrom all matter, including engravings, maps, drawings, and illustrations, except such as they shall certify in their letters transmitting such reports, are necessary, and relate entirely to the transaction of the public business.

That language, it will be observed, is almost identical with the portion of my amendment to which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] took exception.

Or that is necessary, and relates entirely to the transaction of the public business.

The section which I have just read has been the law since 1895. In drafting my amendment at the Printing Office yesterday morning the former foreman of the Printing Office, now the chief clerk, at my request, inserted substantially, and in some respects verbatim, the provision of the present law, and then I added the latter part of the amendment, in order to prevent the abuse which I think exists.

I will send the law to the Chair and call his attention to section 94. In my judgment, he will find that in the amendment this section is not modified to any extent that will make the amendment obnoxious to the rule. I simply want to invoke the judgment of the Chair again this morning as to the question whether the amendment which I offered yesterday is against the rule.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I will yield to the gentleman if he wishes.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman still has the floor——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I thought the gentleman wanted to ask me a question.

Mr. MANN. No; I beg the gentleman's pardon; I wanted to address the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Tennessee to hold that his amendment is still pending?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The amendment was held over at the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to be considered at the close of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the point of order was sustained and that then the amendment was withdrawn for the purpose of modifying it so as to meet the ruling of the Chair. If that is the case, the amendment is not now pending before the committee.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] insists that the amendment is excluded, I shall have to offer it in a modified form. But I think the gentleman must see that my amendment as originally offered does not make any change of existing law—no radical change, at any rate. Hence I thought he would not insist on his point of order this morning. I leave him to say whether he does or not. I know that the amendment is necessary. If the gentleman will pardon me just a minute, I would say that this amendment has the approval of all of the operatives in the Government Printing Office, from the Public Printer all the way down through the most intelligent assistants he has there, and they feel the amendment is necessary.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. May I ask the gentleman exactly how his present amendment adds to this existing law?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It does not add to that section, that part of it that I read, but it goes on to provide an additional safeguard in the way of the exclusion of illustrations and pictures from these annual reports and the reports of officers.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Does the present law provide that no document ordered printed by Congress shall contain any illustration unless the order for printing so specifies?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. No; I do not think it contains that. I think it relates to departments more particularly than to Congress.

Mr. MANN. Then it would absolutely prohibit the publication of any illustration in any document printed by Congress.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the documents we publish are regulated somewhat by the Committee on Printing.

Mr. MANN. I do not wish to be misunderstood or to misunderstand the gentleman. As I understand, when a report is sent to Congress and laid before the House by the Speaker, without any order from Congress, without objection, it is ordered, referred, and printed.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. That is the rule now.

Mr. MANN. But under this change no illustration of any sort, map or picture of any kind, could be printed unless the House should specifically pass an order requiring the map or illustration to be printed.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I do not think that is in the amendment. It must be certified by the head of a department.

Mr. MANN. I call the gentleman's attention to the language:

Whenever any document or report containing an illustration shall be ordered printed by Congress such illustration shall not be printed unless the order to print so specifies.

That is the very first language in the gentleman's amendment. It makes no difference who certifies to it, it makes no difference if each department of the Government has certified that it is necessary to public business, it can not be printed, because there is no way of having Congress order the illustrations to be printed. The Speaker can not order it done when he refers it. The only way to do would be to have it presented to the House as a matter of privilege, and I know of no way of having that done, although the gentleman may. It seems to me that that is a very wide change in the policy of the Government in reference to printing. This would forbid the printing of a map of any kind, any illustration or any document ordered printed by Congress, practically—not theoretically, but practically would. Mr. Chairman, may I ask whether the amendment is still pending upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair the amendment is not before the committee. The Chair sustained the point of order.

Mr. MANN. That is the way I understood it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Then I offer it in the modified form, so as to make a limitation upon this appropriation, and I hope the House will adopt it. If we like it, we can continue it in the next appropriation bill. I ask the Clerk to report it as modified, so as to bring it within the limitation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 15 on page 153 insert the following:

"In expending the sums herein appropriated for printing and binding the following restrictions and limitations shall be enforced:

"Whenever any document or report containing illustrations shall be ordered printed by Congress, such illustrations shall not be printed unless the order to print so specifies; and the heads of the Executive Departments, and the heads of bureaus, not connected with the departments, before transmitting their annual reports to Congress, shall cause the same to be carefully examined, and shall exclude therefrom all matters, including engravings, maps, drawings, and illustrations, except such as they shall certify in their letters transmitting such reports to be necessary and relate entirely to the transaction of public business; and in no case shall the Public Printer permit the insertion in any document, report, or other Government publication, except those emanating from the Patent Office, of any diagram, photogravures, half tone, or other picture or illustration, unless express authorization has been given in writing, with the reason therefor, by the head of the executive department by which such document, report, or publication is issued; and if the same is issued by any bureau or division not immediately under and a part of any executive department, then such authorization therefor must be first given by the Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, upon the amendment as just reported I reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves the point of order.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I would like to hear the gentleman on the point of order. I think it has always been held that you may limit money when you appropriate it for current appropriations.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, there is no doubt about that; and if the language used by the gentleman does in fact restrict his amendment to this appropriation, I suppose it would be in order; but as to pretending to so restrict it he changes the law in various respects, a thing he can not do under the guise of a restriction. It is no restriction upon an appropriation, for instance, to say that the Smithsonian Institution, which now has authority under the law to make certain publications, can not hereafter make a publication until that report has been submitted to the Secretary of the Interior. That is a change of law, not a restriction upon an appropriation.

Most of these other provisions, while he calls them restrictions upon appropriations, are, in fact, changes of existing law. It is true he has the right to offer an amendment restricting an appropriation, but he has no right in restricting the appropriation to set out a law or provisions of new law which change existing law, and it seems to me that the amendment, even with the purported restriction, is still subject to the point of order and is in violation of the order that they can not change the existing law in an appropriation bill.

The gentleman himself has cited the law upon the subject quite fully. The law is on the statute books making specific requirements in reference to what shall and shall not be printed. This is not a restriction upon the appropriation; it is a positive change of law, and if it goes into effect it will not be held hereafter to be a mere restriction upon this appropriation, but will be a part of the permanent law.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations is better prepared to speak on that point than I am; but as I understand it, it would only apply to this appropriation and be a limitation alone upon it. I will ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if I am not correct in that?

Mr. CANNON. I understand that under the rule it is quite common for Congress to make any limitation it sees proper touching the expenditure of this money, because we may withhold appropriations entirely. If we can do that, then we can say upon what terms we will grant appropriations. In other words, the greater includes the less.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I do not see that I can say anything further. This is purely a limitation upon the appropriation for this year, and as I understand the general rule stated by the gentleman from Illinois, we have a right to put that limitation upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. In what respect does the gentleman from Tennessee claim that this amendment is any more of a limitation than the existiug law with respect to the printing of these diagrams and maps and photographs?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The latter portion of the amendment that I offer is not in the law as it is at present. There is a further limitation there, and it is intended to correct the very abuse to which I referred in my remarks yesterday afternoon. If the Director of the Mint can print a report of 150 pages and use 50 of those pages for pictures, it seems to me that that is such an abuse of the privilege as ought to be stopped. Now, he has done that, and he claims, I suppose, that it is done within the letter of the law, for I will not presume that the Director or any other officer will deliberately violate the law.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman think that in a great many of the reports it would be far better to leave out the reading matter and print only the illustrations?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. If that is the case, then we ought to abolish the report, because pictures do not always speak.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman could not say that to the New York Journal and some of the other papers that publish so many illustrations, and effectively, too.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Of course that is facetious. We all know that it is not necessary to go into the matter of illustrations and cartoons in order to make a report. We want the report. We do not need the pictures.

But, Mr. Chairman, if the illustrations are necessary, I will say in further answer to the gentleman that it is no trouble for the head of the department so to certify, and when he does so certify, under my amendment the illustrations will be printed. My object is simply to serve the public good. I do not believe that a bureau officer should have the right to tax the Government more than 33 per cent of the cost of printing his report for inserting in it useless pictures. That is all I want to stop. I have no other interest in it. We can cut down the amount of the public printing very largely by adopting this amendment. Under all the usages and customs obtaining here and the law as I understand it, a mere limitation upon an appropriation is always in order.

I am content for the Chair to rule.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair, the amendment is not necessarily a limitation upon the appropriation for public printing. If the heads of the departments certify the necessity for printing the matter which is now published, concerning which the gentleman from Tennessee objects, it would be published as now, and in that case there would be no limitation. The same publications could be made under this amendmont, if it is adopted, that are now made. It proposes to give authority to the heads of departments to restrict the expenditure of this money by eliminating or not printing certain things specified in the amendment, but it is discretionary with the heads of departments whether these things shall be printed or not. Therefore the amendment proposed would be only a conditional limitation, and, in the opinon of the Chair, that is not sufficient. The limitation must be an absolute limitation, not a conditional one, to take the amendment out of the rule which is invoked. The Chair is also of the opinion that the latter part of the amendment is new legislation, changing existing law; and it not being such a limitation as the rule contemplates, the Chair thinks the amendment in the modified form is not in order, and sustains the point of order.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I shall not appeal from the ruling of the Chair, but I do think that this great abuse ought to be remedied, and I have done my duty in attempting to do that.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman will still be able to remedy it efficiently in other ways, where it can properly be amended.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. If the gentleman will suggest any way, I should like to avail myself of it.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of the bill. I do this simply to avail myself of the opportunity, Mr. Chairman, of explaining a little more fully the amendment which I offered on yesterday which occasioned some little controversy. I was apprehensive that under a misunderstanding of the facts it might have appeared to some gentlemen that the committee had erred in adopting that amendment. Briefly, Mr. Chairman, the War Department strongly recommended that amendment in order that it may complete the arrangement which it has already been authorized to make to carry out the sale of the military reservation at Indianapolis and to purchase additional ground in that vicinity upon which to locate an Army post. The only question at issue is the probable undervaluation or overvaluation from the standpoint of the purchaser of the land to be bought.

My colleague from Indiana suggested that the appraisement for purposes of taxation showed such a variance between the assessed value and what the Government is to pay for this land that probably the whole authorization ought yet to be denied. Mr. Chairman, Indiana is not alone in having low valuations for purposes of assessment. Under our State law the assessors fix the valuation of realty for taxation purposes once in each six years—the 1st day of April being the date upon which that valuation is fixed. My recollection is, and I have verified it by calling upon some of my colleagues, who agree with me, that the date upon which this present valuation was fixed was six years ago. The approaching April 1, that is to say, next April, a new assessment will be made. Six years ago lands in the rural sections were very low in value, and taking into account their low valuation for assessment, it would not be unreasonable to find a rather low valuation at the end of the six-year period.

I am in a small degree familiar with the lands of that vicinity. I know that since this valuation was fixed interurban railways have penetrated that section of the county, and that the improvements incident to such enterprises have occasioned an increase in the valuation of real estate. I have but little doubt but what the next assessment, on April 1st, will show a higher rate of valuation upon farming lands in that vicinity than that which now rests upon the assessor's book. This land has been selected not by Congress nor by me, but by the War Department. It is true the Government pays a little more than individuals pay for the same property, and in view of the general low valuation that occurred six years ago, in view of the increase on account of interurban railways and rural free delivery, etc., I do not believe the Government is paying an exorbitant price for this land, and I trust the members of the House will realize that the Government is always obliged to pay a little more than private individuals. And as the Department has executed its options in the usual way, taking into view all the circumstances which led to the fixation of values, I can see no criticism to be now entertained.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to his colleague?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, the RECORD on yesterday shows a statement of my colleague [Mr. ZENOR] that this land is appraised at probably half its value. I understand my colleague, the gentleman from the district [Mr. OVERSTREET], to state that these gentlemen comprising the firm, from whose letter Mr. ZENOR quoted, are reputable and reliable citizens. If that is true it makes a bad record. I would like to ask my colleague what is the value of the land?

Mr. OVERSTREET. My information, gathered from talks with acquaintances of mine at Indianapolis and from the statements of the public press, which have been made since the circular letter has been issued, lead me to believe that the value fixed by the Government is not out of reason.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I would like to ask the gentleman one other question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman may be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Indiana be extended five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. The question I was about to ask my colleague is whether he is prepared to state to this House the value of that tract of land.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I am prepared to state upon information received from citizens of my home who are in a position to know, from the statements made in the public press of all party papers in Indianapolis, made since the circular letter was issued, that in my judgment its valuation is not too high.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Certainly. Let me say, just a moment, that this land is situated within about 8 miles of the center of Indianapolis, a city of about 200,000 population. The land is reached by interurban railways, with rural free-delivery facilities. The gentleman will appreciate that land can not be had under these favorable conditions at a very low price. Now I yield to my friend from Kentucky.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I understood the gentleman to say yesterday afternoon that there had been two boards sent out by the War Department to ascertain the valuation of this property. I would like to know if there was a disagreement between the two boards.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Perhaps I was in error in saying two boards; it was the same board sent out twice. I wish to submit a telegram which I have just received, signed by several different real estate firms of Indianapolis, all reputable gentlemen and leading business men, in which they make the statement that "the price asked for Lawrence site is not above market price." The "Lawrence site" mentioned is the land now being discussed. The telegram is as follows:

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., February 14, 1903.

Hon. JESSE OVERSTREET:

The undersigned real estate dealers of Indianapolis hereby certify that the United States is not being held up. The price asked for Lawrence site is not above market price.

James E. Cruse; I. N. Richie; W. E. Stevens; The Central Trust Co.; Fieber & Reilly, H. W. Craft, manager; real estate department, John Worcher & Bro.; John T. Spann & Co.; Gregory & Appel; C. F. Sales & Co.; W. E. Mick & Co.; Wm. Gordon; John M. Todd.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, on yesterday afternoon the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ZENOR] made a statement coming from letters which I thought were going to be printed in the RECORD as a part of his remarks. They were not. I hold the letters in my hand. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] stated that these letters were circular letters. They are not circular letters, but written directly to Mr. ZENOR, and I wish to read them or have them read as a part of my remarks.

Mr. OVERSTREET. The same letter was sent to a great many people, and that is why I referred to them as circular letters.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman has just stated that he believes from all the information he can obtain that this land is worth $100 an acre, the price asked. Now, in one of these letters is included a newspaper advertisement of land at private sale, and I will read it:

Real estate adjoining the Army post section; 160-acre farm, as good as any bought by the Government. Will sell this at $50 per acre. Will some one who advocates the Government's purchase at $100 per acre please buy this?

CHAS. M. CROSS & CO., 19½ N. Meridian.

So it appears that land is being advertised for sale adjoining this land at private sale at one-half the price intended to be given for the Army post. I state in all seriousness, and I have no interest in this except as a Representative, that when it is proposed to pay twice as much for land as a citizen owning it offers to take at private sale, it is a shocking state of affairs and such a state of affairs as this House ought not to readily accept. In the same letter is contained the assessed valuation of these tracts for which we are to pay $180,900. The assessed valuation is only $55,778.17. Will the gentleman from Indiana, or anyone, admit that the assessed valution by a sworn officer is less than one-third of the actual value. Now, I was surprised that under this state of facts the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ZENOR] should withdraw his point of order.

Mr. SHATTUC. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. SHATTUC. Is it not a fact that the farm the gentleman has referred to for sale at $50 an acre is one-half of it swamp?

Mr. SIMS. I have read all there is about it in the advertisement. It says "as good as any bought by the Government," and it is offered at private sale at $50 an acre. When the law was passed authorizing the sale of the arsenal it authorized the investment of the fund arising from sale in lands for an Army post and I am satisfied that this whole 1,853 acres can be obtained for $154,000, the up-set price of the Government sale. In view of these facts why should we give the additional amount? I ask that these two letters and these figures be printed as a part of my remarks. I do not want to take up longer the time of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to print the papers he refers to in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The following are the letters and paper referred to:

RALSTON & CAMDEN, 143 EAST MARKET,
Indianapolis, Ind., February 7, 1903.

Hon. W. T. ZENOR, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We hand you an important document copied from the assessor's book of our county. Please scan it carefully. In a short time, we understand, you will be called upon to vote an appropriation of $150,000 in addition to the $154,000 already voted to purchase some cheap, rough, hilly, clay land, much of it in its wild state of cultivation, in this county for the new Army post. We have made a synopsis of 2,377.99 acres in the sections in which the Army post is to be located. This shows an average assessed value of $30.43 per acre. The Army post is to take 1,833 acres out of this, which 1,833 acres we do not know, but on the same valuations of $30.43 per acre the appraised value will be $55,778.19. This is what the Government is asked $180,900 for, and the sum of $125,121.81 over and above the assessed valuation of this ground. Will you support such an appropriation to purchase such undesirable ground at such a ridiculous high price? Some of the improvements are assessed as follows, so you can see it is not a progressive neighborhood: $50, $50, $25, $100, $150, $350, $200, $250, etc.

Yours, respectfully, RALSTON & CAMDEN.

RALSTON & CAMDEN, 143 EAST MARKET,
Indianapolis, Ind., February 11, 1903.

Hon. W. T. ZENOR, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: It seems by the dispatches from Washington that the letter of information which we sent you on the 7th instant concerning the Army post was questioned as to its accuracy. What we gave you was taken from the assessor's office. The township assessor of this township says that these lands are appraised at over one-half their value. We will refer to a piece of ground now owned by A. L. Witty, as noted in the slip sent you, containing 74.23 acres, appraised at $1,560. This land is in the Army-post site, and was purchased by Mr. Witty in August, 1900, from the Blount, heirs for the sum of $1,700, which is about $23 per acre. (See Deed Record Book 37, p. 113, in the recorder's office of Marion County, Ind.) The contract for the sale of this land is in the hands of a reputable real-estate agent in this city and can be produced.

As a further proof of our correctness in our statements, see inclosed advertisement of a farm now advertised in this neighborhood, taken from to-day's Indianapolis News:

"REAL ESTATE.—Adjoining Army-post section; 160-acre farm, as good as any bought by the Government; will sell this at $50 per acre. Will some one who advocates the Government's purchase at $100 per acre please buy this?

"CHAS. M. CROSS & CO.,
"19½ North Meridian."

We are positive the price asked for the Army-post site is from $70,000 to $90,000 more than it is worth, and we produce these facts to substantiate our former information; and if the people that are urging the purchase of this ground are sure the Government is getting a bargain, we invite them to produce facts to substantiate their claim.

Yours, respectfully, RALSTON & CAMDEN.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Chairman, I have been familiar with this land, having passed through it or near to it, as I have for the past forty years every time I have gone to the capital city from my home. The very near vicinity of it is not only reached by what is known as the Big Four Railroad, but by a great interurban railroad. As stated a while ago by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET], the appraisement of all lands in Indiana are made every six years. I think it was six years ago that an appraisement was made of our land, and immediately after the first year when our lands were assessed at their full value for taxation, whereas it had been assessed at a two-thirds valuation for taxation. The appraisement, it is fair to say, was made low.

Now, I have sold within the last five years a tract of land that was assessed at $25 an acre for $30 an acre. I can not buy that land, nor can any land be bought in my county, or within the four townships where this is to-day, for $75 an acre, on account of the increased value of land in that vicinity. It is so all over the State.

Four years ago, when we came to buy land in the county in which Danville, Ill., is situated, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] knows, on which to establish a National Soldiers' Home, the Board of Managers thereof made every effort to buy land suitable for the purpose at as low a price as possible, and the price at that time for lands in that vicinity were all the way from $100 to $200 per acre, farm lands, while just over the line in Indiana, about 6 or 8 miles away, lands fully as good in quality for agricultural purposes were selling at from $50 to $125 less. In other words, until within two or three years lands in Indiana were selling at very low prices, while to-day it is worth from $50 to $150 per acre—good farm land that could have been bought four years ago for $40 to $60.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I should like to ask my colleague one question. He says that he knows this land—has passed through it continually for forty years. What does he say is the fair cash value of the land?

Mr. STEELE. My opinion is that its fair cash value would be $75 or $80 an acre if you could buy it in one tract from a single individual; but when you undertake to buy from 50 or 60 different people, of course there is very great difficulty in consummating a purchase.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Then my colleague regards $100 an acre as about right?

Mr. STEELE. I would not suppose it could be bought at any less than $100, and I do not think there would have been any difficulty here about this purchase but for the action of the real estate men whose letter the gentleman from Tennessee has read. If they had been able to sell the land on another side of Indianapolis, where goes the drainage of the city, there would have been no question of this kind raised. I have no doubt that they themselves put the advertisement just read in the papers and had it sent here in order to raise a rumpus about it.

Mr. ZENOR. Does not my friend know that somebody had an option on this land prior to these negotiations?

Mr. STEELE. I do not; and I do not believe we would have heard anything about this matter if it had not been for those "kickers."

Mr. ZENOR. I recollect that some years ago an effort was made to purchase land for the Government here in the city of Washington, and its value was estimated at $25,000. The committee reported that as the value, but subsequently that land was offered for $16,000, and did not find a purchaser at that price.

Mr. STEELE. On this subject I submit, with the leave of the House, the following telegrams received this morning:

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., Febraury 14, 1903.

Hon. R. W. MIERS, M. C., Washington, D. C.:

From personal observations and information gathered this morning from persons familiar with and reliable in judgment, would value the land as a whole at eighty to one hundred dollars per acre. The uses for which it will be purchased will make the broken and bluff part of it, possibly, of greatest value. I consider an Army post of very great value to the State wherever located.

WINFRED T. DURBIN.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., February 14, 1903.

Hon. ROBT. W. MIERS, M. C., Washington, D. C.:

The land for Army post worth from ninety to one hundred dollars per acre. Stand by the post.

W. T. TAYLOR.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachsetts. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] asks unanimous consent to offer an amendment.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. My amendment is on the subject-matter already pending—the same question to which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] offered his amendment. We have not yet left that provision.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] offers an amendment on page 153. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That no part of the appropriation herein made for printing and binding shall be used for any illustrations or any engravings in any document or report ordered printed by Congress unless the order to print expressly authorizes the same; nor in any document or report of any executive department or Government establishment until the head of the executive department or Government establishment shall certify in the letter transmitting such report that the illustration is necessary and relates entirely to the transaction of the public business.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. I do not see why it is necessary that unanimous consent should be had. We went back in the bill by agreement to the point where the gentleman from Tennessee offered his amendment. That amendment was ruled out of order by the Chair. Since then we have not left that part of the bill. There has been debate by unanimous consent, but we are still at the spot to which we recurred by unanimous consent, and I offer this amendment.

Mr. MANN. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the last motion made in the Committee of the Whole was by the gentleman from Indiana, who moved to strike out the last word. Whether that motion was in order or not makes no difference, because no point of order was made upon it; and the debate was had on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana to strike out the last word, which effectually disposes of the claim of my esteemed friend from Massachusetts.

The CHAIRMAN. According to the understanding of the Chair, when the committee returned last evening to the place in the bill where the gentleman from Tennessee desired to offer his amendment, it was agreed that the amendment should be passed over pending negotiation between members for the purpose of modifying it. The gentlemen from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] has this morning offered his amendment in a modified form, and it has been ruled out on a point of order. In the opinion of the Chair it will require the unanimous consent of the Committee of the Whole to return again to that portion of the bill.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Then I offer this amendment as a new section of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Upon that I make a point of order, that the amendment is not germane to any provision of the bill.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. This is an appropriation bill, and the amendment proposed is to limit the whole appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair the amendment in the form of a new section is germane to the bill. It relates to the publication and distribution of public documents.

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Chairman, I raise this point of order, that the amendment was not "illustrated," and the Clerk was not able to read it so that we could catch fully its purport. Probably if there had been some "illustration" drawn by my esteemed friend to go with that amendment we could have caught its purport easier.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts will be again read.

The Clerk again read the proposed amendment of Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. In the opinion of the Chair this amendment as drawn is a limitation upon the appropriation made by this bill for the printing of public documents. It certainly limits the appropriation in so far as the appropriation can be used for the publication of documents that are published by authority of Congress.

Mr. MANN. I do not desire to detain the House more than a moment. The provision offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts is mostly the present law. The amendment proposes no changes from the present law except the provision that hereafter no public document which is ordered printed by the House (which means the annual reports that come before the House) shall contain any illustration of any sort whatever, unless the order for printing so specifies. That is the only change which the amendment proposes in the existing law. Of course there will be no order specifying that the illustrations be printed. Under the practice and rules of the House it is impracticable to make such an order. The usual order made by the House is made by the Speaker, practically, without objection on the part of the members of the House. I have no doubt that the illustration of books has become to a certain extent abused, but in my opinion it would be far better for us to restrict the unlimited publication of language often devoid of thought, which appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD by unanimous consent, and continue to print some of the useful illustrations that appear in the public documents of the country.

Mr. Chairman, what would be said of a book or magazine today which published an article capable of being properly illustrated and which contained no illustrations? Some of the members of the House examine the reports. I am afraid that my esteemed friend from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] never examines the reports except to criticise. I know that, for myself, I often obtain most valuable information from some of the illustrations, and, to my mind, the illustrations in most of the documents are worth more than the reading matter. They give a better idea. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] yesterday referred to the picture of a lamp post before the Philadelphia mint. I do not know what was in the picture, but I dare say that the picture was a picture of the new Philadelphia mint. It would be described at great length in a report to Congress, when a picture of it would contain all the information that lengthy language would contain. If it is the desire of the House to prohibit any future illustrations of the reports which are ordered printed by Congress, then that amendment ought to prevail; otherwise it ought not to prevail.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to debate this but for a moment. I quite agree with the gentleman from Illinois that if we could suppress the useless language which is often used in the House it would be much better, and if the gentleman will draft an amendment accomplishing that end I will heartily support it.

Mr. MANN. All the gentleman needs to do is to object to unanimous consent which is granted here every day.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Now, Mr. Chairman, he speaks of the illustrations as useful. I simply wish to show to the House just this one document, the report of the Boundary Commission on the boundary between the United States and Mexico. Here is a volume containing nothing but pictures of that size, each picture having upon it as its central feature one boundary post. The first one is marked No. 1 and the last one is marked No. 258, all practically just alike, differing somewhat in the mountains or villages or cats and dogs and horses that are put in to make it a pretty picture.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. LACEY. What would such a book as that be worth now, if we had it printed a hundred years ago containing illustrations of the boundary line between Alaska and the United States.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Why, it would not be worth anything.

Mr. LACEY. It would locate every corner stone.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. It would not locate a single stone, because you can not by this picture tell where it is. It is simply the picture of a monument.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, if my friend will allow me, I will suggest that that line was never surveyed, so that it would be like the picture of a hole. [Laughter.]

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Now, Mr. Chairman, I think that we all know that this is a great abuse and that it ought to be checked, and I think this amendment will check it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, just a word. The gentleman has given one illustration of the effect of pictures. I simply call the attention of members to the illustrations in the morning Post, as showing the effect at times and the propriety and applicability of illustrations. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill and amendments to the House with the recommendation that the amendments be adopted, and that the bill as amended be passed.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TAWNEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 17202, the sundry civil bill, and had instructed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be adopted and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded upon any one of the amendments?

Mr. ZENOR. I ask for a separate vote on the amendment at the end of line 10, on page 112.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will take note of this amendment. Is a separate vote demanded upon any other amendment? If not, the Chair will submit all the other amendments in gross, excepting the one designated by the gentleman from Indiana. The question is on agreeing to those amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment to which the gentleman from Indiana calls the attention of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 10, on page 112, insert:

"For additional amount necessary for purchase of land for a military post at or near Indianapolis, Ind., and for necessary expenses incident to the appraisal and sale of the arsenal property in said city, $30,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to this amendment.

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that he was in doubt, and he would ask the House to divide.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 86, noes 54.

Mr. ZENOR. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The question being taken on ordering the yeas and nays, the Speaker announced 30 members rising, a sufficient number.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the other side.

The other side being taken, there were 104 members opposing the demand for the yeas and nays.

Accordingly, more than one-fifth seconding the demand, the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken on the amendment above reported; and there were—yeas 125, nays 86, answered "present" 11, not voting 129, as follows:

Mr. BELLAMY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House of Representatives: During the present session of this Congress I introduced a bill (H. R. 17356) for the erection of an equestrian statue at Wilmington, N. C., to the memory of Maj. Gen. Robert Howe, of the American Revolution. I can not expect, in the closing hours of this session, when the congested state of the Calendar will preclude the consideration of many important measures, which are entitled to precedence, to secure the adoption of this resolution, but I do hope to bring to the attention of the country many of the incidents of the life and character of this remarkable man, in the hope that the next Congress will be possessed of sufficient patriotism to pass it.
Mr. Chairman, in this centennial era, when we are commemorating the important events which have made this Government a great and powerful nation and enabled it to attain a century's growth, we should not alone seek to celebrate its material advancement, but should at least endeavor to perpetuate in some enduring form the memories of the great men whose wisdom and valor contributed so powerfully toward making the American Revolution successful, and thereby establishing the first great representative government that has ever been vouchsafed to mankind.
Carlyle has truly said that hero worship exists forever and everywhere; not loyalty alone; it extends from divine admiration to the lowest practical regions of life, and yet hero worship has never been a salient feature in the character of the average American citizen. A government whose basic principles are liberty and equality, and whose powers are not derived by divine inheritance and centered in a single individual, but emanate from the free consent of the people governed, has in it dogmas which tend to lessen reverence, yet it can never suppress the natural and spontaneous feeling of veneration for that which is truly great, for the true hero, be he philosopher, poet, priest, man of letters, warrior, or ruler.
There has always existed among all people and in all ages a special admiration for the warrior whose deeds of daring have worked good for his people, and the American people form no exception to this universal rule. The fame of Washington, the general, embalmed forever in the hearts of his countrymen, has been further perpetuated in statues of bronze and marble, that future generations may emulate his virtues and be inspired by his patriotic example. But few indeed of the great generals who aided Washington by their counsel, who shared his confidence, and who won glory and renown on many of the fields of battle which secured our independence, have been honored by their countrymen. Major-Generals Howe, Baron Steuben, Lincoln, Schuyler, and others performed their part in the great struggle equally with Washington, and achieved renown and fame excelled only by their leader. Some of them were leaders in the movement originating and precipitating the Revolution, and all prominent in consummating it with their sword and their talent. The Government, then an experiment, has become a Government respected and honored as the equal of the oldest and most permanent and stable governments of the world.

It is but just and proper then that these great generals should at least be remembered by a posterity which has reaped untold blessings from their patriotic efforts. It is with the view of rescuing from the oblivion into which it has fallen the life and services of one who possessed more eminently, if possible, the confidence of General Washington than any of his compeers that your speaker has offered this resolution to have Congress erect a monument to his memory in the city of Wilmington, near which he was born and lies buried.

Among the brilliant men of the Revolutionary period who have not been accorded the praise to which their patriotic services entitle them stands Maj. Gen. Robert Howe, of Brunswick, N. C. Of his early history little is preserved save that which is handed down by tradition in the vicinity of his birth. He was born in the precinct of Clarendon in the year 1732 in the present limits of Brunswick County, N. C. He was the son of Job Howe, a well-educated, influential, and wealthy rice planter, who resided at his palatial home on the Cape Fear River and spent his summers on the coast near the city of Wilmington. Like the Southern gentlemen of that day, and for generations afterwards, this home was the seat of hospitality and refinement, and in this atmosphere of culture Robert Howe was partially reared. His grandfather had come over to America with the Yeamans colony in 1665, which was planted first on Old Town Creek, but afterwards moved to Charleston, S. C. His father, Job Howe, came to the Cape Fear region from Charleston with Col. Maurice Moore, his kinsman, who assumed charge of the lands of Sir John Yeaman abandoned in 1690.

Robert Howe was connected by blood and marriage with the best families in North and South Carolina. He was the lineal descendant of Sir John Yeamans, and was the grandson of Mary Moore, the daughter of James Moore, the governor of the two Carolinas in 1670. At an early age, as was the custom in those days among gentlemen of wealth, Robert was sent by his father to England, and there had the advantage of the social life of the best London circles, and received the benefits of a solid and refined English education. He spent a good number of years in Europe, and did not return until a short time previous to his father's death, which occurred at his summer home on the coast in the year 1748. It appears from the will of his father, recorded in New Hanover County, that Robert had two brothers and two sisters, and although they lived in that vicinity, on fine plantations devised to each, yet in the early part of this century the name of Howe became entirely extinct, and is no longer found except occasionally among a few old family servants, negroes, who to-day alone retain the name.

In 1763 we find Robert Howe settled on his rice plantation at the mouth of Old Town Creek, the site of the first English settlement under Sir John Yeamans. He lived, like his father, in affluence, with his broad acres around him, his slaves, his library well stored with the best books of the day, which was always an indispensable requisite to the well-furnished home of the southern country gentleman. At that day the English Government had a well-fortified post at the mouth of the Cape Fear River, known then and ever afterwards as Fort Johnston. Robert had an ambition to lead a military life. The royal Governor Tryon had partaken of his hospitality and had formed an attachment for him. A vacancy occurring in the position of commandant of the fort, he was appointed to it by the governor. In a letter dated July 29, 1766, at Old Brunswick, addressed to the Right Hon. Lord Burrington, secretary of war, Governor Tryon says:

> Capt. John Dalrymple, commandant of Fort Johnston, in this province, died the 13th instant in said fort. As the above command was from His Majesty, I have issued a new one to Robert Howe, a gentleman of this province, to succeed him. * * *

This is the first act of a public nature recorded of Robert Howe, and it was doubtless this appointment and the exercise of its duties that gave him a taste for the military life he was afterwards to lead. He held the position for a few years and was succeeded by John Abraham Collet. It was about this time that Robert met, wooed, and won the heart and hand of Sarah Grange, the daughter of Thomas Grange, a respectable planter on the Upper Cape Fear River, and they were afterwards married; and although they lived happily together for a number of years, they became, for some reason, eventually estranged and were afterwards peaceably separated, as appears from a deed providing for her support, recorded in the year 1772. They were never reunited.

In January, 1772, Robert Howe entered political life. He offered himself as a candidate from Brunswick County for the general assembly of the province, which was to meet that year in November, and was duly elected by the people. Josiah Martin was then governor of the province, having about two years previously succeeded Governor Tryon. Governor Martin was not so suave as Tryon, and was not generally popular. He was a man of a firm and obstinate disposition, and by his indomitable will doubtless widened the breech and precipitated the conflict which was soon to follow between the people and the Crown. The royal governors in colonial times were invested with the most absolute and arbitrary powers. They had entire control over nearly all appointments to office and almost as much power in the regulation of the elections themselves, and had also the right to convene, prorogue, and dissolve the assemblies at pleasure. Soon after the assembly met and organized Robert Howe introduced a resolution to regulate the elections and to have triennial meetings of the legislature. This bill was aimed at the curtailment of the governor's prerogatives, and was defeated through the instrumentality of the governor and his council, and a short time afterwards the governor dissolved the assembly. But by the resolution itself was exhibited a bold and fearless spirit in its author, which characterized him through life and was a faculty so necessary to fit him for the important part he was soon to play in the history of that momentous period.

A like spirit of opposition to the encroachments of the Crown and its officers had begun to prevail in the other colonies. Josiah Quincy, of Massachusetts, was prominent as a leader in the movement. He set out for a voyage through the Southern colonies for the purpose of having a conference with the Whig leaders. While on this expedition, on the 29th of March, 1773, Quincy paid a visit to Cornelius Harnett at Hilton, in the old mansion formerly standing there. Of this visit tradition informs us with some details. It is said that Mr. Quincy had no previous acquaintance with Harnett. On arriving at Harnett's residence he asked to be accommodated with a night's lodging, which was cordially granted him by his hospitable host. After supper, thinking Harnett might be a Tory, and it would be unsafe to advert to any political topic, Quincy specially avoided it, but in the course of the conversation, Harnett ascertaining in some way the cause of Quincy's appearance in the South, immediately began to express his views very positively and boldly concerning the tyrannical and oppressive course of the King toward his colonies. It is said that Quincy was so greatly surprised at finding Harnett so much in accord with his own views that he could not withstand embracing him upon discovering such a kindred spirit.

The whole night was spent in conversation, and the next morning, upon Harnett saying to Quincy—which Quincy already knew—that in the immediate vicinity was a bold, intelligent, and determined man in full sympathy with their own views, Robert Howe, he was sent for and repaired thither without delay; and then and there, at Hilton, on the Cape Fear River, these three men, closeted together in the deepest of deliberation, concocted and agreed upon the scheme for the American Revolution. While on this journey Mr. Quincy kept a diary of the events of the day, and it is quite interesting to note the estimate of Howe by this sagacious and discerning patriot and of the incidents of this visit. In Quincy's Memoirs he records:

> March 26, 1773.—Spent most of the day in public and private conversation with Col. Robert Howe, a leader and active member of the general assembly. Fine natural parts, great feeling, pure and elegant diction, with much persuasive eloquence, a Crown officer with a lucrative post, a staunch Whig and colonist. I received much information in provincial politics and great pleasure from his relation. Zealous in the cause of America, he relished the proposed Continental correspondence, promised to promote it, and write to me by the first oppottunity.
> March 28.—Yesterday was a most delightful day. Fort Johnston is as delightful a situation. The commander, Col. Robert Howe, is a happy compound of the man of sense and sentiment with the man of the world, the sword, and the senate.
> March 30.—Spent the night at Mr. Harnett's. Robert Howe, Harnett, and myself made the social triumvirate of the evening. The plan of Continental correspondence highly relished, much wished for, and resolved upon as proper to be pursued.

Well might Hilton be termed the birthplace and cradle of American liberty, as it was so fitly termed by Vice-President Henry Wilson in a speech from the portico of this building, delivered in 1872. On departing from the Cape Fear region, Quincy bade his friend Howe adieu, each hoping to meet again and pledging each other to urge on the cause of independence,

Captain Howe giving to Mr. Quincy a letter of introduction to Governor Tryon, who had then become governor of New York.

The legislature of 1772 was dissolved by Governor Martin in the early spring, as he desired to have members elected who would support his administration. But, notwithstanding the opposition fomented by the governor against him, Robert Howe was again returned to the assembly, which met the same year at Newbern on December 4. At this session the speaker of the house of commons laid before that body letters from several provinces requesting the appointment of a committee to inquire into the encroachments of England upon the liberties of the American people. The house passed a resolution—

That such example was worthy of imitation, by which means communication and concert would be established among the colonies, and that they will at all times be ready to exert their efforts to preserve and defend their rights.

The committee was appointed, and after the speaker's name, as chairman, stands next in order the names of Robert Howe and Cornelius Harnett. It was chiefly through the influence and exertion of these two men that this committee was chosen, and thus was recorded the first act of a legislative character that led to the Revolution.

During this session the house had passed an act prohibiting the sheriffs from collecting that portion of the poll tax devoted to the payment of the public debt. The governor commanded the sheriffs to enforce the collection, and a direct clash arose between the legislative and executive branches of the government. The judicial branch was silent, as the courts were closed. The governor forbade the further meeting of the assembly. Whereupon among the Whig leaders it was decided to call a general congress to meet at Newbern August 20, 1774.

The governor called upon the council to concert measures to prevent the election of members as delegates to this meeting of the congress, but the people were thoroughly excited, and in spite of the governor's strenuous efforts to the contrary the congress assembled at Newbern on the 25th of August, pursuant to the call. Among the delegates sent was Robert Howe, of Brunswick County, and his learning and eloquence were felt in this body. Among the many important resolutions passed were those claiming the right of a citizen to trial by a jury of his vicinage, and denounced the sending of Americans to England for trial in criminal cases, and that no subject should be taxed without representation. They approved of the conduct of the people of Massachusetts, and resolved not to import tea or any British manufacture, or export their own products to Great Britain unless their grievances were redressed. On the 11th of February, 1775, Colonel Harvey called another congress to meet at Newbern on the 3d of April. As a delegate to this congress and also to the general assembly, which was to meet at the same time, Robert Howe was again elected from Brunswick County.

Governor Martin issued his proclamation against the assembling of this congress, and finding his voice unheeded, on the morning of the meeting of the assembly he issued another proclamation commanding them to desist from the proposed convention. But men determined on the attainment of the liberty for which they were striving would brook no opposition, and the convention was held in the very face of the governor. Governor Martin still persevered in his course. On the meeting of the assembly he went before that body and addressed them at length. He told them that he looked with horror on the proceedings of some of the colonies; that the meetings and committees had injured the rights of the Crown and insulted its officers; that they were in duty bound to prevent the meeting of the congress; that it should be the care of the assembly to lead back the people to their allegiance; that Parliament was at that very time deliberating for the good of America, and they should await the result.

The assembly did not like the tone of the governor's address and immediately proceeded to the appointment of a committee to reply to it. Robert Howe, for his peculiar fitness, was selected as its chairman. On the 7th of April Robert Howe wrote and reported an address which, as a justification for the action of his people, as well as a refutation of the charges of the governor, stamps him as a clear, forcible, and logical writer, than whom the colonies had no superior. Captain Howe said:

That they contemplated with horror the condition of America, involved in difficulties and distressed by invasions of ancient rights and immunities. In this way the colonies had been driven to measures which, however extraordinary, were still warranted by necessity. The appointment of committees in counties and towns had been adopted to resist unconstitutional encroachments, and the assembly was convinced that no step had been taken in that direction which was not salutary and proper. It was not to be controverted that all British subjects had the right of assembling and petitioning for a redress of grievances, and any attempt to deny or abridge this privilege was in direct conflict with the constitution. It was the least of their desires to prevent the objects and session of the provincial congress, then in session, or to join his excellency in his injurious epithets in its disparagement.

They further stated:

That they would gladly aid in the establishment of a proper court system, but declined any provisions for Fort Johnston.

This reply was so very distasteful to the governor that the next day he dissolved the assembly, and this was the last held under royal auspices in North Carolina.

Captain Howe returned to his home, and as the clouds of war were gathering thick and lowering over his country he immediately began to prepare for action. Having no trained soldiers he employed himself drilling the people and training them to arms. While thus engaged the governor issued a violent proclamation at Fort Johnston on the 16th June, 1775, against the people of the colony. A meeting of the district committee of safety was held at the court-house in Wilmington on the 20th June, with delegates present from Brunswick, Bladen, Onslow, Duplin, and New Hanover counties. Robert Howe appeared as a member from Brunswick.

Immediately a committee was appointed, with Robert Howe as chairman, to answer the proclamation which was ordered to be published. Captain Howe prepared the address, which, like his former addresses, was a masterly production. He said among other things:

In order to prevent the pernicious influence of the said proclamation, we do unanimously resolve, that in our opinion his excellency Josiah Martin, esq., hath by the said proclamation, and by the whole tenor of his conduct since these unhappy disputes between Great Britain and the colonies, discovered himself to be any enemy to the happiness of this colony in particular, and to the freedom, rights, and privileges of America in general. And in reply to Lord North's resolution, introduced into Parliament, concerning America, which his excellency alluded to, "Resolved, That this was a low, base, flagitious, and wicked attempt to entrap America into slavery, and which they ought to reject with contempt which it deserves."

News of the battle of Lexington and Bunker Hill had now reached the Cape Fear, and the people began to prepare with increased exertions for the emergency. It became apparent that as Fort Johnston was the key to the entire Cape Fear country it must be held by the colonies, and on the 18th of May, after due preparation, Col. John Ashe, in command of a body of troops, among whom was Captain Howe, attacked, set fire to, and partially burned Fort Johnston, right under the English fleet then in the harbor.

About this time, also, another meeting of congress was called for August 21, 1775, at Hillsboro. Thither Robert Howe again went as the chosen delegate from Brunswick County. The meeting of this congress was alike denounced by Governor Martin from his place of refuge on a British man-of-war. But the congress, to his denunciation, voted to bear their part of the expense of a Continental army, and organized one of their own by providing for the immediate formation of two regiments of 500 men each, and appointed James Moore as colonel of the first and Robert Howe as colonel of the second regiment. By this same congress, on September 8, Colonel Howe was also appointed one of a committee, with William Hooper as chairman, to prepare an address to the people of the British Empire, declaring the views of the body as to the existing state of affairs. This was the last act of a civil nature in which Colonel Howe was engaged until the close of that great struggle which was to terminate in the establishment of the greatest constitutional republic the world has ever seen.

Colonel Howe, as we have seen, was prominent in every step which led to the Revolution. He was ever ready, with his broad and liberal views, to advance the cause of his country. He had with his pen, by his persuasive eloquence on the hustings, and his debates in the legislative halls, as well as his votes, shown himself a true statesman, born as it were for the occasion. But it is not for us to regard him alone as a statesman, for he was great as a soldier. No sooner had the Hillsboro congress adjourned than Colonel Howe began to form his regiment and continued training his soldiers. In this he was engaged when he was informed of the efforts of Lord Dunmore to raise an army at Norfolk, and of his emissaries to incite an insurrection among the slaves in the Albemarle region of North Carolina. He immediately, in December, 1775, proceeded with his regiment to Norfork to engage the British and to rescue his people from the threatened insurrection. He arrived at Norfolk on the 11th of December, two days after the skirmish between Lord Dunmore and the Virginia troops at Great Bridge, but found that Lord Dunmore had only withdrawn to Norfolk and was then in possession of the town. Colonel Howe, being the officer of highest rank, assumed command of the American troops, and, an engagement ensuing, drove Lord Dunmore and his entire force from the country, and on the 14th of December took possession of the city.

Lord Dunmore on retreating betook himself to the British fleet, and on January 1, 1776, attempted to recapture the city. He opened a severe bombardment on the town from the fleet, and with such terrible results that nine-tenths of all the houses were reduced to ashes, and the fire raged for several weeks. But Colonel Howe successfully repelled the assault, and Lord Dunmore retired from the country.

At this point Colonel Howe remained until after the 1st of March, when, for his gallantry and good conduct, he was promoted by the Continental Congress to the rank of brigadier-general in the Continental Army and ordered to the Southern Department, under Maj. Gen. Charles Lee.

On May 4, 1776, the State congress, through its president, addressed General Howe, and returned to him a vote of thanks "for his manly, generous, and war-like conduct in these unhappy times, and more especially for the reputation our troops acquired under his command." General Howe thus endeared himself to his own countrymen, but had become exceedingly obnoxious to the British.

So great was this aversion that on the 5th day of May, 1776, Sir Henry Clinton, then in command, issued a proclamation against committees and congresses, and invited the people to return to the royal standard, and offered and promised pardon to all the people of North Carolina who would submit, "except Robert Howe and Cornelius Harnett." On the 12th of the same month Cornwallis, sent by Sir Henry Clinton, with 900 men ravaged and burned General Howe's plantation at Old Town Creek and took away a few bullocks and a number of slaves. Maj. Gen. Charles Lee was now on his way to take charge of the military affairs in the South. While in North Carolina he was joined by General Howe and the two North Carolina regiments under Col. James Moore and Alex. Martin, the latter appointed to succeed General Howe, promoted.

These two regiments arrived at Charleston on June 11, 1776, and these, under the command of General Howe, participated in the brilliant victories of Forts Sullivan and Moultrie, which occurred on the 28th of June. At this battle the Americans had only one-tenth as many guns as were brought to bear on them, and yet they won the day. Of the soldiers General Lee said: "No men ever behaved better or ever could behave better." Here the North Carolina troops fought with conspicuous bravery and added new laurels to their own fame and that of their commander.

General Lee, in a report of the battle made to Edmond Pendleton, of the Virginia convention, said:

I know not which troops I have the greatest reason to be pleased with, Muhlenberg's Virginians, or the North Carolina troops. They are both equally alert, zealous, and spirited.

During the month of July, General Lee, with General Howe and Colonel Moultrie, left Charleston for an expedition against Florida, but when they arrived at Savannah General Lee was recalled by General Washington, and in October following Howe was placed in command of the southern department, with headquarters at Charleston. In retaliation for incursions from Florida, General Howe, at the head of 2,000 Americans, militia from North Carolina, South Carolina, and Georgia, attempted the capture of St. Augustine. He met with little opposition before he reached the St. Marys River, where the British had erected a fort called Tonyn, in compliment to the governor of the province. On the approach of Howe they destroyed the fort and, after some slight skirmishing, retreated toward St. Augustine. But the Americans were driven back from Florida by a plague of fever which swept away nearly one-fourth of their number and rendered their retreat absolutely necessary.

It was while at Charleston that occurred the dispute between Colonel Gadsden and General Howe, which led to the duel between them on the 20th of August, 1778. The dispute arose out of a conflict of authority between the States and the Continental Congress—a question of conflict of authority which agitated and seriously affected the Confederacy in the late civil war, and which was never clearly and permanently settled in the United States between the States and the General Government until the adoption of the Constitution. As the duel was an episode in his life of so remarkable a character and our historians have been so inaccurate in their references to it, I deem it of so much interest as to here give a detailed statement of it, taken from an account of the duel in the South Carolinian and American Gazette, dated September 3, 1778, three or four days after its occurrence.

"On the 29th October, 1776, General Howe published in his orders the promotion of Colonels Gadsden and Moultrie, and assigned them to their respective commands.

On the 23d of August, 1777, General Gadsden resigned his command into the hands of General Howe. General Howe sent the resignation to Congress with a letter explaining it, and Congress, accepting it without comment, wounded Colonel Gadsden's feelings. To this letter Colonel Gadsden replied in an open letter to Congress. This letter was the cause of the duel. General Howe says that about four months before the date of his letter, that is, about the 1st of May, after he had been about six months in undisputed command of the post, General Gadsden desired to know by what right he commanded, and claimed that he himself was the natural commander in South Carolina. General Howe explained to him his right, and showed the error into which General Gadsden had fallen respecting claims of right. General Howe replied "that as he had no doubt respecting his own right he would express none, but if the other desired it he would communicate those doubts to Congress as his," and this was assented to.

At a subsequent interview a few days afterwards General Howe was led to believe that General Gadsden was now satisfied as to his right, and the letter was not written. One day in August they met at the house of President Lowndes, and General Gadsden inquired whether the letter had been written as agreed, and on General Howe replying in the negative, and giving his reasons for not having done so, General Gadsden said the matter should be brought before the South Carolina assembly. Shortly afterwards a motion was made by William Henry Drayton inquiring into the nature of General Howe's command in that State. This motion was promptly rejected, and General Gadsden immediately resigned his commission into General Howe's hands. General Gadsden gave an explanation of the matter and says:

"On the 11th of August I received by the General's aid-de-camp a long expostulatory letter, with a demand for satisfaction at the close unless I made him reparation for the expressions I had made use of relative to him in my letter of the 4th of July. I wrote for an answer next morning that I was ready to give him any satisfaction he thought proper, when and where he pleased; that I thought him the aggressor in having wrote such an unnecessary detail of that matter in it, omitting my principal objection, and especially for not letting me, whom it so nearly concerned, have a copy of it; and that he had nobody to blame but himself; that I never saw his detail, which had such immediate effect, for ten months after the date of it.

"Three letters from him and two from me passed before the matter came to a point. In his he gave me assurance that he did not mean in anything he said to reflect upon or injure me, and as to the breach of promise I accused him of he declared he really understood me as he had set forth; so that if there was a fault, his understanding and not his integrity was to blame; and had he imagined I wished to see his letter he should most cheerfully have sent it to me; that he had not the least wish to conceal it from me. My friends, Colonels Elliott and Horry, who were the only ones who had the least hint of the affair from me, seemed to think this a great occasion, and required some notice or apology on my side, and our friend, Colonel Pinckney, who was the General's second, appeared to be of the same opinion. But I, looking upon it only as personal and private to me, and whereas the expressions of me he particularly referred to related to the manner of a public act, I determined to make no concessions, but to meet him in any manner he pleased."

Accordingly on the 13th of August the hostile meeting took place, and the following account given of it: "After the generals met and courteously saluted each other, General Howe desired his second to acquaint his friends, in case he should fall, that it was his earnest request that they should not prosecute General Gadsden beyond the formality of a trial, and General Gadsden desired both the seconds to acquaint his friend in case he should fall, that he entirely forgave General Howe and earnestly begged them not to prosecute him, and he particularly enjoined Colonel Pinckney to charge his son not to intermeddle in the affair at all. General Howe's second then stepped off the distance then fixed upon by him and Colonel Elliott—18 short paces—and the generals being placed, Colonel Elliott said:

"'Gentlemen, we have marked out your distance, leaving you to act as you please, not doubting but that, as this is an affair of honor, you will act consequently with the strictest rules of honor.' General Howe then said to General Gadsden, 'Fire, sir.' General Gadsden said, 'Do you fire first?' General Howe replied, 'We will both fire together.' General Gadsden made no answer, but both presented. There was a pause for a few seconds, and General Howe said with a smile, 'Why will not you fire, General Gadsden?' General Gadsden replied, 'You brought me out, General Howe, to this ball play and ought to begin the entertainment.' General Howe fired and missed. General Gadsden after a short interval fired his pistol over his left arm, about at right angles from General Howe, and then called out to General Howe to fire again. General Howe smiled, and at the same time dropping his hands with his pistol in it said, 'No, General Gadsden, I can not after this.'"

General Gadsden's second said he was glad to see so much honor in the generals; that he did not think General Gadsden could have made a handsomer apology or General Howe have shown a higher sense of honor than in acting as he had done. Then General Gadsden went up to him and said, "Now, General Howe, I will mention to you what I could not before, as my letter was a public one, and the words contained in it seemed to me proper, and as yours was a private one, the parts in it which, in the opinion of my friends, left an opening for an apology I could not take notice of; but I told my friends in the carriage before I came on the ground that I intended to receive your fire, and though I may, perhaps, talk this matter over again, I assure you I shall never in future make use of any harsh expressions concerning you." General Howe said that it was very agreeable to him that the matter terminated in this way, and that he was happy that he had missed him. General Gadsden's second said he hoped that the difference that had caused this duel might now subside and be left on that spot. The generals, then, in token of this reconciliation shook hands and parted.

We rarely see such chivalry displayed in the duel; and although it is intended for the healing of wounded honor among gentlemen, yet as a practice to be condemned, if it must be resorted to, no finer example could be given of what ought to be observed as the rules of the code. General Gadsden was wrong in this matter, but, as it is said, "he was gloriously wrong," and General Howe was completely vindicated.

The unfortunate but gifted Major André, of the British army, who was afterwards executed as a spy, wrote a humorous account of this duel in 18 stanzas, set to the tune of Yankee Doodle, which was published as one of the humors of that day. It is thus given:

ON THE AFFAIR BETWEEN THE REBEL GENERALS HOWE AND GADSDEN.

CHARLESTON, S. C., September 1, 1778.

We are favored with the following authentic account of the affair of honor which happened on the 13th of August, 1778. Eleven o'clock was the hour appointed for Generals H. and G. to meet. Accordingly, about ten minutes before 11—but hold! It is too good a story to be told in simple prose.

It was on Mr. Percy's land,
At Squire Rugeley's corner,
Great H. and G. met, sword in hand,
Upon a point of honor.

Chorus: Yankee doodle, doodle doo, etc.

G. went before with Colonel E.,
Together in a carriage;
On horseback followed H. and P.
As if to steal a marriage.

On chosen ground they now alight,
For battle duly harnessed;
A shady place, and out of sight,
It shew'd they were in earnest.

They met, and in the usual way
With hat in hand saluted;
Which was, no doubt, to shew how they Like gentlemen disputed.

And then they both together made
This honest declaration,
That they came there, by honor led,
And not by inclination.

That if they fought, 'twas not because
Of rancour, spite, or passion;
But only to obey the laws
Of custom and the fashion.

The pistols, then, before their eyes
Were fairly primed and loaded;
H. wished, and so did G. likewise,
The customs were exploded.

But as they now had gone so far
In such a bloody business,
For action straight they both prepare
With mutual forgiveness.

But lest their courage should exceed
The bounds of moderation,
Between the seconds 'twas agreed
To fix them each a station.

The distance stepp'd by Colonel P.
Was only eight short spaces;
"Now, gentlemen," says Colonel E.,
"Be sure to keep your places."

Quoth H. to G., "Sir, please to fire;"
Quoth G., "No, pray begin, sir;"
And truly we must needs admire
The temper they were in, sir.

"We'll fire both at once," said H.;
And so they both presented;
No answer was returned by G.,
But silence, sir, consented.

They paused awhile, these gallant foes,
By turns politely grinning:
'Till, after many cons and pros,
H. made a brisk beginning.

H. missed his mark, but not his aim;
The shot was well directed.
It saved them both from hurt and shame;
What more could be expected?

Then G., to show he meant no harm,
But hated jars and jangles,
His pistol fired across his arm
From H., almost at angles.

H. now was called upon by G.
To fire another shot, sir;
He smiled and, "After that," quoth he,
"No, truly I can not, sir."

Such honor did they both display
They highly were commended;
And thus, in short, this gallant fray
Without mischance was ended.

No fresh dispute, we may suppose,
Will e'er by them be started;
And now the chiefs, no longer foes,
Shook hands, and so they parted.

Chorus: Yankee Doodle, doodle doo, etc.

After this encounter and toward the close of December, 1778, we find General Howe at Savannah, Ga., sent by General Washington to command the defenses around that town, to prevent the threatened attack of the British. On arriving he immediately bestowed as much labor on the fortification as he could command men and means to give. But Governor Houston, of Georgia, denied his right to command at that post, as the governor himself claimed to be commander in chief and entitled to precedence of rank on Georgia soil. But General Howe as commander of the Continental forces under Washington could not concede this to the State authorities. He deemed it his duty to point out to the legislature of Georgia and to the governor, in the strongest expressions of which he was master, the want of proper defenses, and asked for men to throw up the fortifications.

But owing to this friction between Governor Houston and General Howe over the precedence to command the legislature refused to take any action whatever. Governor Houston still continued to dispute his right to command; and when the British force sailed in the river Savannah was without means of defense. General Howe, having under him only about 900 men, without fortifications, was unable to prevent the landing of the British force, nearly four times as large, with heavy guns and ammunition, and consisting of thirty-five hundred men, under Colonel Campbell, from New York, and a like number, under General Prevost, from St. Augustine, among whom was the regiment of royalists, chiefly from North Carolina, under the command of Col. John Hamilton, of Halifax.

The North Carolina Continentals here fought face to face against their brothers, the Loyalists. A battle took place, with great loss of life, the Continental troops being attacked both in the flank and front by so great an excess in numbers that, notwithstanding the bravery and gallantry with which the Continentals fought, they were driven from their position, and the British carried the day. The valor and patriotism of the Americans could not prevail over the immense number of the British. General Howe incurred here the resentment of Governor Houston over this dispute as to whether the State or Contmental authorities had the right to control and direct the management of the affairs of war, but this disaster showed how necessary it was to concede this power to the Continental Congress, as it was through the want of the coopération of Governor Houston, or, rather, his opposition, coupled with the paucity of numbers of the Americans, that led to the defeat at Savannah. But the whole conduct of the battle showed in General Howe the highest marks of generalship.

After this, at the instance of Governor Houston, a court-martial, presided over by Maj. Gen. Baron Steuben as president, with Brigadier-Generals Knox and others, was ordered to investigate the conduct of General Howe on the charges of having sacrificed the Georgia troops and leaving the country exposed, but the court held him not guilty, and, in the language of the court, "We do acquit him of both charges with the highest honor." In the early part of the year 1779 General Howe was transferred to the North, and on the 15th of July was ordered against Verplancks Point, subsequently to Ridgfield. He also cooperated with General Wayne in his attack on Stony Point on the Hudson.

About this time the city of New York was evacuated by the Americans, and the British under Sir Henry Clinton took possession. The American Army withdrew into the interior of the State. The position of West Point, on the Hudson, was considered by General Washington as the key to the Army's position. And so great was Washington's confidence in the military ability and courage of General Howe that to him was intrusted the command of that department, and on the 15th of May, 1780, he was instructed by Washington to increase his rank and file to 2,500 men, if not now that large, from General Clinton's New York Militia. General Clinton was then governor of that State and commander in chief of the militia. Howe was soon joined by part of Clinton's brigade and latterly by a division of the Connecticut troops, when he was ordered by General Washington to dismiss the militia, having then 2,500 Continental troops.

General Clinton doubtless took offense at the dismissal of his State militia, and immediately began with Benedict Arnold and others to plot for the removal of General Howe. General Arnold made immediate application for the position, whether then with a treasonable design we can only conjecture, but he alleged "that his wound would not allow him to remain in the field," and that was his ostensible reason for seeking the appointment. Arnold secured the influence of Mr. Robert R. Livingston, then a member of Congress from New York, to assist him. Mr. Livingston wrote to General Washington on the 22d day of June, 1780, and stated that General Howe (probably on account of his dismissal of the New York militia), would not inspire the confidence in them essential for engaging their efficient service, and said "If I might presume so far, I should beg leave to submit to Your Excellency whether this post might not be safely confided to General Arnold, who is the favorite of the militia, and who will agree perfectly with our governor."

On the 30th of June General Arnold visited the camp at West Point. General Howe wrote that day to General Washington, "I have taken General Arnold round our works, and he has my opinion of them and of many other matters. I have long wished to give it to you, but I could not convey it by letter." General Howe had always, to a most extraordinary degree, enjoyed General Washington's esteem and confidence, and upon the solicitation for the appointment of Arnold he refused to make it, except that General Howe might prefer to resume his position in the line of the army. General Howe signifying his preference, General Washington acceded to the importunities of Arnold's friends, and on the 3d day of August, 1780, Major-General Arnold was ordered to take command of West Point and its dependencies. And scarcely a month passed before Arnold was guilty of his base treachery and Major André was captured. The result is well known. He was tried by a court-martial, of which General Howe was a conspicuous member, and was convicted and hung.

General Howe was then placed in command of a division on the east side of the Hudson, where he remained until January 10, 1781. At this time a mutiny broke out among the Pennsylvania troops, and by order of General Washington he was sent with five battalions to quell the disturbance. A similar occurrence took place in the New Jersey line on the 22d, and General Washington dispatched General Howe to Ringwood, in that State, to quell the mutiny there. Both of these missions were performed with great promptness, and a few of the leaders having been so speedily and fairly tried, condemned, and executed that a vote of thanks was returned by General Washington, in behalf of the country, to General Howe and his troops, and Congress likewise passed resolutions thanking him for these services.

On the 21st of July, 1781, while still in New York, he was ordered to reconnoiter the enemy's position at King's Bridge, which task was performed entirely to the satisfaction of General Washington. The long struggle of America for freedom was now drawing to a close. Lord Cornwallis, finding it impossible longer to withstand the aggressive movement of the Americans, surrendered his sword to Washington on the 19th of October, 1781, at Yorktown. And on the 18th of the following month Major Craig and his forces left the Cape Fear, and with him disappeared the last vestige of British dominion in North Carolina. General Howe still remained in the service of the Government. The Continental Congress was in session in Philadelphia in June, 1783. Owing to the failure of Congress to levy revenue, which was due to the want of power, a defect in the Articles of Confederation, the Congress, while in session, was attacked by a clamorous mob and compelled to disperse.

For their protection, General Howe was sent with five battalions to suppress the mob. This was successfully accomplished, and was the last act performed by him of importance while in the Army. Soon afterwards he was mustered out of the service, holding then the rank of major-general of the Continental Army. On September 23, 1783, Congress passed a resolution of thanks to General Howe and the officers and soldiers of his command. Before retiring from the Army he took an active interest in forming the Order of the Cincinnati, and was one of the general officers designated at the Cantonment of the American Army June 19, 1783, to establish that society, and he was the first officer of the North Carolina Chapter which he afterwards formed.

He had given six years' continued service to his country, and during all that time he never asked or accepted one moment's recess. To use his own language: "For this service I have sacrificed all other considerations, however interesting, endearing, or heartfelt they might have been." In the spring of 1785 he returned to his home on the Cape Fear, ripe with honors and the gratitude of his country. At Fayetteville he was received with public ovation, and the popular homage extended him was unparalleled in that day, except in the single instance of that given to George Washington. He immediately applied himself to his former occupation of tilling the soil, but was not long allowed to remain quiet at his home. During the summer of the year 1785 he was elected by his people to represent them in the legislature, where he took his seat at Newbern on the 19th of November.

On the 17th of March, 1786, he was sent to select a site for a lighthouse on the Cape Fear River, and, with Mr. Benjamin Smith and the commissioners of pilotage, fixed the location at Baldhead. Again during this year he was a candidate for the legislature from Brunswick. At this time in North Carolina the judiciary was in great disrepute. At Wilmington a court was being held by Judges Spencer, Ashe, and Williams. In the words of Mr. Archibald McLean, a brilliant lawyer of that day, "the most shameful partiality disgraced the bench." The question of the extent of pardon which should be granted to the Loyalists, who had lately been in arms against the Continentals, or adhering to the British, giving them aid and comfort, was greatly agitated among the people, especially in reference to the confiscation acts. General Howe, being a man of broad and liberal culture, favored magnanimity and advocated the restoration of the Loyalists to their property rights and granting general amnesty. He warred against proscription, which filled the air. He met with violent opposition at the polls from the narrow-minded and illiberal.

In a letter written by Archibald McLean to James Iredell on the 3d of August, 1786, he says:

General Howe will, I believe, be returned from Brunswick, though opposed with great assiduity. He openly avows the most liberal principles and execrates the judges and other officers.

Notwithstanding the opposition he was triumphantly elected, thus establishing the fact that the conservative spirit existed and was in the ascendency among the people of North Carolina even in that day, and for which they have ever been and are still justly renowned.

The legislature was to convene at Fayetteville on the 18th of November, 1786. General Howe set out for the capital, and on his way was taken sick. He stopped at the residence of Gen. Thomas Clark, his old friend and comrade in arms, on the Cape Fear River. He became ill, and there continued in declining health until he died. On the 14th of December, 1786, Judge Alfred Moore, one of the associate justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, wrote to James Iredell that "General Howe is at the very verge of the grave; it is supposed that he will die in a few days; he has only got as far as General Clark's." A few days afterwards he expired, at the age of 56 years, and was buried on Grange Farm, now a portion of Columbus County, N. C.

Not even a stone marks his last resting place, and nothing but a small hillock exists to show that even a grave was ever there. What a commentary upon the gratitude of his countrymen!

Thus ended the career of one who did more to bring about the crisis which caused the Revolution than any one man in North Carolina.

He was possessed of versatile talents. He was the life of social gatherings. On these occasions it is said of him that his imagination fascinated, his repartee overpowered, and his conversation was enlivened by strains of exquisite raillery.

He was of noble impulses and liberal views. He was an eloquent speaker and logical debater. He was a power in politics and was great as a soldier, and having attained the highest rank in the American Army, he is easily distinguished as the greatest man North Carolina furnished to the American Revolution, and one of the most aggressive leaders for liberty and independence in all the colonies, in the preservation of whose fame every American citizen should take a just pride, and the American Congress should cheerfully erect a monument to make the name of Robert Howe immortal, that his example may be emulated by all future generations.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TALBERT. Is it not customary to have the bill read a third time?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state to the gentleman that the committee is simply considering these bills and laying them aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. TALBERT. Are these Senate bills, most of them?

The CHAIRMAN. Senate bills, all of them, that are being considered at this present moment.

Mr. TALBERT. Are there no reports to any of them?

The CHAIRMAN. There is a report in the case of every bill.

Mr. TALBERT. I thought there were no reports to any of them. I have not heard any of the reports read. It seems to me we are going along here in a tremendous hurry, without much consideration.

Mr. GIBSON. I call the attention of the gentleman from South Carolina to the fact that we are in Committee of the Whole, and when we get into the House the bills are read twice before passing.

Mr. TALBERT. I was aware of that, but I wished to know if there were no reports to any of these bills.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. The reports are all on file.

Mr. GIBSON. There are reports to all of them.

Mr. TALBERT. I just asked for information. I think you had better read one just once in awhile, so that the public will know that there is such a thing. The people know nothing about these reports.

Mr. GIBSON. I call the gentleman's attention to the report on this bill.

Mr. TALBERT. I know, but you do not put it into the RECORD. I think it better to have a report, but whether you do or not, these bills ought to be read.

Mr. GIBSON. I will say to the gentleman that these bills have all passed the Senate, and have been considered by the House committee.

Mr. TALBERT. But the bills are not even read. I am afraid this thing will fall through and the poor soldier not get anything. They will not think you are doing your duty. I only want to see it done properly. I think there are too few here to pass these things in this way. I just ask the Chairman to count to see how many there are here, to see if we have a quorum.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I hope the gentleman will not do that.

Mr. TALBERT. I want to find out whether there is a quorum. I make the point that there is no quorum present to pass these bills.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina makes the point that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say that a great many members are now in the restaurant getting their luncheon.

Mr. GIBSON. I hope the gentleman will withdraw the request. The members are in the building, but they are now in the restaurant.

Mr. TALBERT. I withdraw the point of no quorum, provided you read a report or two.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. We will, after a while.

Mr. TALBERT. Put in a report or two and let us have the bill read. Do not let us go on in such a hurry. We will fall down and spill the milk if we do not look out.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that no bill is presented which does not have a report accompanying it, and the report is at the disposition of any member of the committee who desires to hear it read. Every one of them is on file. The Clerk will report the next bill.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, certainly that bill is not on this Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Chairman, if that be so, I desire to ask unanimous consent that it may be considered. During my brief term of eight years I have never asked this House to do that. I know this man. He stood on 39 battlefields. He was shot down several times. He went out early in April, 1861, and the regiment that he belonged to and commanded had within its ranks 3,700 men. When it was mustered out there were only 280 left. At Gettysburg, Cold Harbor, Bull Run, and several other battles he lost from one to two hundred and more men, soldiers and officers, who died on the field. This man served twenty-nine years and ten months and fifteen days, and had four months' leave of absence at home with pay due him, so that he had made in service more than thirty years. There was never a charge against him. There was never a default of his duties. He is a real soldier, he is one of the noblest men I ever knew. He was as heroic a man as ever stood on the battlefield, as gentlemen on the other side know, for the Second New Hampshire was one of the fighting regiments. This bill has passed the Senate, it is unanimously reported from the Committee on Military Affairs of the House, and personally I am anxious that this bill should pass. I do not care to take any more time, unless somebody has some suggestion to make.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa withdraw his point of order?

Mr. LACEY. I did not make a point of order. I only made a suggestion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that the bill be put on its passage by the committee. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I rise now not to oppose a bill, but to ask the chairman of this committee for some information, if I can get his attention.

Mr. SULLOWAY. What is the question?

Mr. SIMS. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee whether or not the bills for private pensions are on the increase or decrease this session as compared with what they have been heretofore?

Mr. SULLOWAY. Well, the Spanish war, of course, brought in some more, and there have been quite a lot of applications because of that. As a matter of fact, pensioners who are on the roll at from $50 to $72 a month have been decreasing for the last nine years. There are less by 300 on the roll to-day, or thereabouts—I have not the exact figures—than there were nine years ago.

Mr. SIMS. I understand that, but my inquiry relates to private applications, bills for private pensions. Are they on the increase or the decrease?

Mr. SULLOWAY. I am unable to state. Of course that depends on the number of bills introduced. Some member may introduce a number of bills, say, from 75 to 80, and never ask to have one of them reported.

Mr. SIMS. Is the present management of the Pension Office by the present Pension Commissioner satisfactory to the chairman and to the committee?

Mr. SULLOWAY. I will say frankly to the gentleman from Tennessee that we have hardly reached those matters as yet. This Commissioner has been in there something like a year, perhaps, and I can not answer the gentleman's question in that respect. It is impossible for me to attempt to give any information on that question, and I would not want to be bound by anything I say.

Mr. SIMS. I made this inquiry, not to take up time, but it was often charged by the chairman, as I now remember, together with other members of the Pensions Committee, that the former Pension Commissioner, Mr. Evans, because he would not do what he conceived he ought to do, caused a large increase in the number of private applications. I wanted to compare the action of the present Commissioner with that of the former, to know whether there has been a decrease due to the more liberal ruling of the Pension Office.

Mr. SULLOWAY. I hope it has been more liberal. I do not know whether I ever charged that, but I did think for a long time that the gentleman who held the office prior to the present incumbent failed to do some things——

Mr. SIMS. I find there are 326 bills on the Calendar at this time. It so appears from the outside, at least, without making a close investigation. I wanted to know if the applications for private pensions are on the increase. I do not rise for the purpose of making any objections, but I have thought for a long time that if possible we should devise some means by which this great number of private pension bills would not be pressed on the House. I know the chairman of the committee is well-nigh worked to death, as well as the other members of the committee, and yet they can not act on all the bills that are introduced. If there is any way of reducing this flood of bills I will be glad to see it done. I am not saying this to be captious, but simply to make an inquiry to get information, as I suppose this will be the last time we will consider pension legislation this session.

Mr. SULLOWAY. I understand the kindly feeling of the gentleman from Tennessee. I want to say that there are about 200 Senate bills here that have come over, and, while I have no authority to speak for the Senate, I may say this much, that I hope if the House passes those bills they will clean up, to use a homely expression, the House bills that are over there. Otherwise some three or four hundred bills would fail without having been considered.

Mr. SIMS. In other words, on account of the peculiar circumstances presented to-day more than the usual number are on the Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY. That is exactly it, I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Mr. Chairman, the present Commissioner of Pensions, I think, has been in office about nine months. So far as my observation goes and so far as I have been able to ascertain from the soldiers who apply to me for inquiry, his administration of the office is more satisfactory than it has been prior to his term. It is due to him and my friend from Tennessee to say that the bills introduced in this Congress were never before the present Commissioner. He has had no opportunity to consider them at all. So far there are no bills on this Calendar whose cases have been presented to the present Commissioner. These cases have never been presented to him, but were presented to previous Commissioners, and for various reasons they were unable to grant the pensions asked for.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out "forty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty-five."

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Pensions if this was not a Senate bill?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Yes, sir.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. The amount allowed in the Senate bill was $40 a month, was it not?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Yes, sir.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. I want to inquire what was the reason to reduce it to $35 a month?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I will say, for the benefit of the gentleman from Kansas, that it was fixed at the rate of pension for a major, as that was the rank he held when he incurred the disabilities from which he died and for which he was pensioned, and under the rules of our committee the highest amount that is allowed for a major is $35. So that we have given this lady the maximum that we have given to others who are pensioned as widows of majors.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Mr. Chairman, without any examination of the papers I would not like to disagree with the gentlemen on the Pensions Committee on this subject. This soldier had a very remarkable service and died of paralysis within five or six days of the time when he was stricken, so it was hardly possible for him to have promotion between the time he was stricken and the time he died.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. There is no dispute upon that point, either by the widow or the Pension Department.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. I understood it differently. I thought the Pension Department tried to trace the disease back to some sickness he had before the paralysis.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I forget the time, but it was very short. His promotion came about the time of his death.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. He was stricken by paralysis on the 14th and never was conscious thereafter, and died on the 20th. He could hardly be stricken as a major on the 14th and die on the 20th as a lieutenant-colonel and have his pension reduced that amount with any justice. In this case it is worth while to remember that this soldier had thirty-nine years' service—thirty-nine years of unbroken service, without an hour of absence or an hour of sick leave until within six months of the time when he died. For thirty-eight years and six months, beginning with his enlistment for the civil war, there was not an hour of absence from duty at any time on account of sickness or for any other reason. Then there were a few days when he was sick with some kind of a malarial disease, from which he recovered and returned to duty, and he was on duty at the time he was stricken with paralysis, and in six days he died. If he had lived six days longer, or if the stroke had been deferred for six days, he would have died as a lieutenant-colonel, and she then would have received $40 a month.

I do not care to criticise the action of the committee, for I am aware these gentlemen try as faithfully as we do to consider the cases fairly and do justice upon the facts, but this is a remarkable case, an exceptional one. He had a brilliant record, and his widow is left with three children dependent on the pension. If he had lived to be retired under the bill which is pending in the Senate he would be retired as a lieutenant-colonel and at the same rate of pay that I am asking for the pension of his widow. I think under the circumstances in this case the committee will be justified in opposing the amendment of the Pensions Committee. The amendment is to reduce the pension from $40 to $35 a month. I think the amendment should be voted down and the rate granted in the Senate bill should be allowed.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I will only add a word to what I have already said. While something can be said about the record of this soldier, so there can be about a large number of them, as those serving on the committee similar to the one that I am on all know full well that there are a great many meritorious records brought to our attention. But to change this action would be to ask of every widow whose husband was a major and whose husband held a higher rank at the time of his death to come here and present their claims. Not only that, but it changes the ruling of the Department and the action of the committee, because the general law recognizes that a widow can not be pensioned for a rank higher than that which the disability of the soldier was incurred in.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Before the gentleman takes his seat, I want to ask him if he thinks the disease of paralysis was incurred during the time that he held the rank of major?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I would take the opinion of the medical men rather than my own and that is the best opinion of the medical men who have made an examination of the case.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move that when the committee rise it report this bill back with the recommendation that it lie on the table.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks that when the committee rise they recommend that this bill lie upon the table.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, this is a plain, everyday, ordinary case of desertion. The man enlisted as a volunteer to serve three years, and deserted after two days' service, or, to be absolutely correct—after two days' service he received a furlough for eight or ten days, and from that furlough he never returned, although he owed service for three years, and the war was still on. There is no reason why the record in this case, which is properly made, should be falsified as the bill directs. It not only directs that the soldier shall be held not to have deserted, but that the Secretary of War shall write into the record, not a truth, but the untruth that he did not desert. There were no extenuating circumstances. There is no reason why the bill should pass. In his first affidavit asking for removal of the charge of desertion the soldier did not claim that he was not in desertion. In a subsequent affidavit he claimed to have been in "Canada" securing recruits, and that he was imprisoned there for forty days; of course, it is no valid excuse even if true, and in any event this would only account for a few days of the three years he owed service.

The soldier had a previous record of desertion, which was removed by a general law, inasmuch as he returned from desertion within four months. The minority report on this case gives its history in full. There is no reason why the bill should pass and every reason in righteousness and justice why it should not pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Wyoming that the bill do lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

PHILIP KROHN.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Mr. Chairman, if the committee will allow me, I ask unanimous consent that we go back to Calendar No. 2559, the bill granting an increase of pension to Philip Krohn.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the committee return to Calendar No. 2559. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to. The amendment in the bill fixes the pension at $24 per month. I desire to make it $30.

Mr. PAYNE. That motion, Mr. Chairman, is not in order in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. I believe I ought to correct that by moving to amend the amendment of the committee. The bill contained a provision for making the pension $50 and the committee recommended $24. The Committee of the Whole has adopted the committee amendment. Now, I want that amendment amended, so as to make it read "$30 a month."

Mr. PAYNE. That will have to be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. CALDERHEAD. I think not if the committee has given me liberty to reconsider.

Mr. PAYNE. I am unwilling, Mr. Chairman, to sit here and see the rules of the House overridden in Committee of the Whole. It can be done by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is clearly correct. It can only be done by unanimous consent. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to vacate the former action of the committee on the bill H. R. 4066 and amend it so as to fix the pension at $30 a month. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to know if there is any good reason for this action?

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. CALDERHEAD. If gentlemen will not go into hysterics I will not take much time.

Philip Krohn was a remarkable soldier. He was commissioned as an officer for merit in service before he was 21 years of age. He was twice a prisoner. He was severely wounded in the head by an explosion of a shell. He was a man of eminent ability; of large heart and great soul, one of the most eloquent orators to whom men ever listened, and for twenty-five years of his life he charmed every audience before whom he appeared, and every word that he uttered made men better and gave us a loftier standard of life. He had the virtues and the faults of a great and generous nature. He bore his own misfortunes and his suffering without complaint. He never asked for a pension of any kind while able to maintain himself; and now, at the age of 60 years, he is stricken with paralysis. The rule of the committee has been that in cases of paralysis they would allow a pension of $30 a month. This bill was introduced by Mr. Ray of New York. I think he must have been absent when the committee considered it, and that no one was present who knew the facts. I was absent when it was considered in committee and did not know of the bill till I saw it on the Calendar this afternoon. I could not let it pass by, when I was acquainted with the facts of the history of this man and knew of his great ability and service, without moving to make this amendment.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I call for the reading of the report, so that we may know what the circumstances of this case are.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4066) granting an increase of pension to Philip Krohn, submit the following report:

This bill proposes to increase the pension of the soldier named therein from $12 to $50 per month.

Philip Krohn, the officer named in this bill, and now 60 years of age, is shown by the records of the War Department to have served as quartermaster-sergeant, second lieutenant, and first lieutenant of Company G, Fifth New York Cavalry, from August 22, 1861, to May 15, 1865, when honorably discharged, and these records further show that he was captured at Orange, Va., July 17, 1862, confined at Richmond, and paroled at Aikens Landing, Virginia, August 5, 1862; that he was again captured, at Ashland, Va., June 1, 1864, and paroled December 10, 1864.

He is now pensioned under the act of June 27, 1890, at $12 per month for total inability to earn a support by manual labor, the result of paralysis of the right side and disease of the digestive organs.

His claim to pension under the general law, filed in August, 1899, and based upon a shell wound of the head, resulting in paralysis, chronic diarrhea, piles, and catarrh, was rejected by the Pension Bureau in January, 1901, upon the ground of no record and claimant's inability to furnish evidence showing the existence of said disabilities in the service.

Medical testimony filed in the Pension Bureau shows that the beneficiary has suffered from deafness, diarrhea, and piles since about 1890; that about 1896 he had a paralytic stroke, and that on October 25, 1897, he had another stroke.

When last examined, on July 3, 1900, the board of surgeons stated that the beneficiary was a Congregational minister, and rated him $4 for disease of rectum, $17 for paralysis of the right side, and $22 for impaired hearing, and the board of surgeons then stated that sensation and motion was much impaired by reason of paralysis; that he walked with a limp; that loss of motion was more marked in the right arm and hand, his speech indistinct, and the mental faculties impaired.

Papers filed with your committee show that the beneficiary can not preach and is a total wreck physically; and a petition signed by a number of citizens of the town of Candor, N. Y., also filed with your committee, sets forth that he is in every way unable to perform any kind of labor to support himself and that his only income was a pension of $12 per month.

An increase of this soldier's pension, following precedents, is warranted in view of his service of four years and the fact that he is paralyzed and that his mental faculties are impaired.

The bill is therefore reported back with the recommendation that it pass after the same shall have been amended as follows:

In line 3 strike out the word "is."

In same line, before the word "hereby," insert the word "is."

In line 6, before the word "Company," strike out the word "of" and insert in lieu thereof the words "first lieutenant."

In same line, after the word "Fifth," insert the word "Regiment."

In same line, before the word "Cavalry," insert the word "Volunteer."

In line 7 strike out the word "fifty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty-four."

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I have no objection to the bill.

The amendment of Mr. CALDERHEAD was, by unanimous consent, considered and agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. SULLOWAY. I move that the Committee of the Whole rise and report its action to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CAPRON reported that the Committee of the Whole House, having had under consideration certain bills on the Private Calendar under the special rule of the House, had directed him to report that the bill (S. 5879) to remove the charge of desertion from the Army record of Eli Hibbard be laid on the table; also that sundry other bills, some with and some without amendment, be passed.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MCCLEARY. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table House bill 16842—the District of Columbia appropriation bill—in order that we may nonconcur in the amendments of the Senate and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MCCLEARY] calls up the District of Columbia appropriation bill, returned from the Senate with amendments, and asks unanimous consent that all the amendments of the Senate be nonconcurred in, and that the House ask a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses. If there be no objection, that order will be made.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. MCCLEARY, Mr. BURKETT, and Mr. BENTON as conferees on the part of the House.

PRIVATE PENSION BILLS, ETC.

Mr. SULLOWAY. I ask unanimous consent that on the bills reported with and without amendment from the Committee of the Whole House the previous question be considered as ordered to their passage.

There was no objection; and it was ordered accordingly.

ELI HIBBARD.

The House proceeded to the consideration of the bill (S. 5879) to remove the charge of desertion from the Army record of Eli Hibbard, the same having been reported from the Committee of the Whole House with the recommendation that it lie on the table.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole House will be agreed to.

The Chair hears no objection; and it is ordered accordingly.

IMPROVEMENTS AT BROOKLYN NAVY-YARD.

Mr. HALE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy is directed to report to the Senate as soon as practicable what improvements are necessary in the water front in the navy-yard, Brooklyn, N. Y., for the proper berthing of battle ships and fleets.

WATER FILTRATION.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That 200 copies of Senate Report No. 2380, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, be printed and bound in cloth for the use of the Committee on the District of Columbia.

STATEHOOD BILL.

Mr. QUAY. I submit the following resolution, to go over until to-morrow, under the rule:

The resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas House bill 12543, to enable the people of Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico to form constitutions and State governments and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, has been under discussion in the Senate since the 10th day of December, last, and must fail unless voted upon at an early date:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that a date and hour prior to the 2d of March next should be fixed for a final vote upon the bill and all amendments that are pending or may be offered thereto.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will go over, under the rule.

ELMER E. FORESHAY.

Mr. DUBOIS. I submit a resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Civil Service Commission is hereby directed to furnish to the United States Senate a statement of the charges and evidence on account of which Elmer E. Foreshay was dismissed from the surveyor-general's office of Idaho.

Also whether under the ruling of the civil service he is eligible to any other position in the Government service.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SPOONER. I think the resolution had better go over until to-morrow.

Mr. DUBOIS. Very well.

Mr. SPOONER. I have no objection to this particular resolution, but if we begin an investigation into the causes of removal from the public service our entire time will be occupied. I think the Senator perhaps will himself come to that conclusion on reflection.

Mr. DUBOIS. I am perfectly willing to give, either now or to-morrow, my reasons for the introduction of this resolution.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not object to that. I do not wish to prevent the Senator from giving them now, if he chooses.

Mr. DUBOIS. If the Senator asks that the resolution go over, of course it will go over.

Mr. HOAR. Let the resolution be read once more.

The Secretary again read the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate agree to the resolution?

Mr. SPOONER. I ask that it may go over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the resolution goes over, under the rule.

INVESTIGATION OF AFFAIRS IN THE PHILIPPINES.

Mr. CARMACK submitted the following resolution, which was read:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Philippines be authorized and instructed to sit during the recess of Congress for the purpose of prosecuting the investigation heretofore authorized by resolution of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the resolution may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over, under the rule.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

A bill (H. R. 6745) for the relief of Anthony R. Ravenscroft; and

A bill (H. R. 15461) for the relief of Daniel F. Lee.

The bill (H. R. 16885) to extend to the port of Niagara Falls, N. Y., the privileges of the act approved June 10, 1880, governing the immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

COINAGE SYSTEM OF THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Mr. LODGE. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 15520) to establish a standard of value and to provide for a coinage system in the Philippine Islands.

If the bill can be taken up at this time I believe it can be disposed of without debate, and with perhaps only a vote on the substitute bill. Its great importance I think no one will question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks for the present consideration of House bill 15520.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, I rose not to object to the bill but to say that I will object to it if it provokes or elicits any discussion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been read in full to the Senate. Is there any objection to its consideration?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Philippines with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the unit of value in the Philippine Islands shall be the gold peso consisting of 12.9 grains of gold, nine-tenths fine, said gold peso to become the unit of value when the government of the Philippine Islands shall have coined and ready for, or in, circulation not less than 5,000,000 of the silver pesos hereinafter provided for in this act, and the gold coins of the United States at the rate of $1 for 2 pesos hereinafter authorized to be coined shall be legal tender for all debts, public and private, in the Philippine Islands.

SEC. 2. That in addition to the coinage authorized for use in the Philippine Islands by the act of July 1, 1902, entitled, "An act temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," the government of the Philippine Islands is authorized to coin to an amount not exceeding 75,000,000 pesos, for use in said islands, a silver coin of the denomination of 1 peso and of the weight of 416 grains, and the standard of said silver coins shall be such that of 1,000 parts, by weight, 900 shall be of pure metal and 100 of alloy, and the alloy shall be of copper.

SEC. 3. That the silver Philippine peso authorized by this act shall be legal tender in the Philippine Islands for all debts, public and private, unless otherwise specifically provided by contract.

SEC. 4. That section 77 of the act of July 1, 1902, is hereby amended so that it shall read:

"SEC. 77. That the government of the Philippine Islands is authorized to coin for use in said islands a coin of the denomination of 50 centavos and of the weight of 208 grains, a coin of the denomination of 20 centavos and of the weight of $83\frac{1}{10}$ grains, and a coin of the denomination of 10 centavos and of the weight of $41\frac{44}{100}$ grains; and the standard of said silver coins shall be such that of 1,000 parts, by weight, 900 shall be of pure metal and 100 of alloy, and the alloy shall be of copper."

SEC. 5. That the Philippine peso herein authorized and the subsidiary silver coins authorized by section 77 of the act of July 1, 1902, as amended by the preceding section of this act, shall be coined under the authority of the government of the Philippine Islands in such amounts as it may determine, with the approval of the Secretary of War of the United States, except as limited in section 2 of this act, from silver bullion purchased by said government, with the approval of the Secretary of War of the United States: Provided, That said government may, in its discretion, in lieu of the purchase of bullion, recoin any of the silver coins now in or hereafter received by the treasury of the government of the Philippine Islands into the coins provided for in this act or in the act of July 1, 1902, as herein amended, at such rate and under such regulations as it may prescribe; and the subsidiary silver coins authorized by this act and by the act of July 1, 1902, shall be legal tender in said islands to the amount of $10.

SEC. 6. That the coinage authorized by this act shall be subject to the conditions and limitations of the provisions of the act of July 1, 1902, entitled "An act temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," except as herein otherwise provided; and the government of the Philippine Islands may adopt such measures as it may deem proper, not inconsistent with said act of July 1, 1902, to maintain the value of the silver Philippine peso at the rate of 1 gold peso, and in order to maintain such parity between said silver Philippine pesos and the gold pesos herein provided for, and for no other purpose, may issue temporary certificates of indebtedness, bearing interest at a rate not to exceed 4 per cent annually, payable at periods of three months or more, but not later than one year from the date of issue, which shall be in the denominations of $25, or 50 pesos, or some multiple of such sum, and shall be redeemable in gold coin of the United States, or in lawful money of said islands, according to the terms of issue prescribed by the government of said islands; but the amount of such certificates outstanding at any one time shall not exceed $10,000,000, or 20,000,000 pesos, and said certificates shall be exempt from the payment of all taxes or duties of the government of the Philippine Islands, or any local authority therein, or of the Government of the United States, as well as from taxation in any form by or under any State, municipal, or local authority in the United States or the Philippine Islands: Provided, That all the proceeds of said certificates shall be used exclusively for the maintenance of said parity, as herein provided, and for no other purpose, except that a sum not exceeding $3,000,000 at any one time may be used as a continuing credit for the purchase of silver bullion in execution of the provisions of this act.

SEC. 7. That the Mexican silver dollar now in use in the Philippine Islands and the silver coins heretofore issued by the Spanish Government for use in said islands shall be receivable for public dues at a rate to be fixed from time to time by the proclamation of the civil governor of said islands until such date, not earlier than the 1st day of January, 1904, as may be fixed by public proclamation of said civil governor, when such coins shall cease to be so receivable: Provided, That the public offices of the government of said islands shall give a preference for all public dues to the silver pesos and the silver certificates authorized by this act, and may at any time refuse to receive such Mexican dollars and Spanish coins as may appear to be counterfeit or defective.

SEC. 8. That the treasurer of the Philippine Islands is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to recive deposits of the standard silver coins of 1 peso authorized by this act to be coined, at the treasury of the government of said islands or any of its branches, in sums of not less than 20 pesos, and to issue silver certificates therefor in denominations of not less than 2 nor more than 10 pesos, and coin so deposited shall be retained in the treasury and held for the payment of such certificates on demand, and used for no other purpose. Such certificates shall be receivable for customs, taxes, and for all public dues in the Philippine Islands, and when so received may be reissued, and when held by any banking association in said islands may be counted as a part of its lawful reserve.

SEC. 9. That for the purchase of metal for the silver Philippine peso authorized by this act, an appropriation may be made by the government of the Philippine Islands from its current funds, or as hereinbefore authorized, which shall be reimbursed from the coinage under said sections.

SEC. 10. That the silver Philippine pesos hereinbefore authorized may be coined at the mint of the government of the Philippine Islands at Manila, or arrangements may be made by the said government with the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States for their coinage or any portion thereof at any of the mints of the United States, at a charge covering the reasonable cost of the work.

SEC. 11. That the silver Philippine peso hereinbefore authorized shall bear devices and inscriptions to be prescribed by the government of the Philippine Islands, and such devices and inscriptions shall express the sovereignty of the United States, that it is a coin of the Philippine Islands, the denomination of the coin, and the year of the coinage.

SEC. 12. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed, when requested by the government of the Philippine Islands, to cause to be made and prepared any drawings, designs, and plates, and execute any coinage, engraving, or printing of notes and certificates authorized by this act, and to make a proper charge for the same, covering as nearly as may be the actual cost, which shall be defrayed from the revenues of said islands.

SEC. 13. That section 78 of the act of July 1, 1902, and all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act, and all provisions of law in force in the Philippine Islands making any form of money legal tender after December 31, 1903, except as provided in this act, are hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PATTERSON. The vote was not on the amendment offered by myself?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No; on the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. LODGE. That has been agreed to. It is now open to the Senator to offer his amendment, if he so desires.

Mr. PATTERSON. I offer an amendment to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert——

Mr. LODGE. Add it as an additional section.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill as a new section the following:

SEC. —. That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to invite the Governments of Great Britain, France, and Germany, and of such other gold-standard countries as he may deem proper, and of the Governments of Mexico and China, and of such other silver-standard countries as he may deem proper, to appoint representatives to meet with representatives to be appointed by the President of the United States at the city of Washington, or at such other city as may be deemed convenient and suitable, to take into consideration and to devise and suggest a plan for adoption by the several governments by which a fixed commercial exchange relation shall be established and maintained between the silver coin of the silver-standard countries and the gold coin of the gold-standard countries, and that when such a plan shall be agreed upon by the delegates of the countries herein specifically named with those of the United States the President shall report the same to Congress, and upon its approval by Congress the President shall use the good offices of the United States to secure its adoption by other governments.

Mr. LODGE. I have no objection to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I desire to say only a single word in regard to this amendment. To the general policy of the amendment I agree, but I think the phraseology should be changed, which can be done in conference.

Mr. LODGE. It can be done in conference—I understand that. The committee agrees entirely to the general principle of the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to call the attention of the Senator who has the bill in charge to the following language in section 7:

That the Mexican silver dollar now in use in the Philippine Islands and the silver coins heretofore issued by the Spanish Government for use in said islands shall be receivable for public dues at a rate to be fixed from time to time by the proclamation of the civil governor of said islands until such date, not earlier than the 1st day of December—

Mr. LODGE. It is the 1st day of January. The Senator is reading from an earlier print, which is wrong. The date is the 1st day of January, 1904.

Mr. ALDRICH. That has been changed.

Mr. TELLER. What I wanted to suggest is that that is a very short time.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator will notice that they are not compelled to do it at that time.

Mr. TELLER. That is the question I wanted to ask, whether it would be considered as imperative.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly not. It is simply directed that they shall not do it before that time.

Mr. TELLER. The limitation is January 1, 1904.

Mr. LODGE. But they can postpone it as much longer as may be necessary.

Mr. TELLER. Very well; then I do not insist upon an amendment.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed.

Mr. DUBOIS. I offer a substitute, commencing with section 80 and running to section 97 of the print I send to the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho will have to ask that the vote by which the amendments were engrossed be reconsidered.

Mr. DUBOIS. I make that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the vote by which the amendments were ordered to be engrossed will be reconsidered. The Senator from Idaho offers an amendment as a substitute for the bill. The Secretary will read the different sections without the former numbers.

Mr. DUBOIS. Yes; let them be read as section 1, etc.

The Secretary read the proposed substitute, as follows:

SEC. 1. That the Philippine government is hereby authorized to establish a mint at the city of Manila, in the Philippine Islands, for coinage purposes, and the coins hereinafter authorized may be coined at said mint. And the said government is hereby authorized to enact laws necessary for such establishment: Provided, That the laws of the United States relating to mints and coinage, so far as applicable, are hereby extended to the coinage of said islands.

SEC. 2. That the said Philippine government is authorized to coin a silver dollar, which shall contain 416 grains of standard silver, and the standard of said silver coins shall be such that of one thousand parts by weight nine hundred shall be of pure metal and one hundred of alloy, and the alloy shall be of copper. And upon the said silver dollar there shall be devices and inscriptions to be prescribed by the government of the Philippine Islands, with the approval of the Secretary of War of the United States, which devices and inscriptions shall express or symbolize the sovereignty of the United States and that it is a coin of the Philippine Islands, together with the denomination of the coin expressed in English, Filipino, and Chinese characters, and the date of its coinage.

SEC. 3. That any owner of silver bullion may deposit the same at the mint in the Philippine Islands, to be coined as hereinbefore provided. SEC. 4. That when bullion is brought to the mint for coinage it shall be weighed by the treasurer in the presence of the depositor, when practicable, and a receipt given, which shall state the description and weight of the bullion: Provided, That when the bullion is in such a state as to require melting before the true weight in silver can be ascertained, the weight after melting shall be considered as the true weight of the bullion deposited.

SEC. 5. That there shall be charged to the depositor by the mint for such coinage 1 cent for each dollar coined, and the amount received from these charges shall be accounted for and appropriated toward defraying the expense of coining and the contingent expenses of the mint.

SEC. 6. That the dollar hereinbefore authorized may be coined at the mint of the United States at San Francisco, in California, upon the request of the government of the Philippine Islands, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, and the owners of silver bullion may deposit the same for coinage at such mint under regulations to be made by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States as respects deposits, coinage, and transfer to the Philippine Islands, and a charge shall be made therefor at the rate of 1 cent for each dollar coined and the cost of transfer to the Philippine Islands in addition thereto: Provided, That such deposits at the San Francisco mint shall be confined to silver produced in the United States.

SEC. 8. That the subsidiary silver coins authorized by the preceding section shall be coined under the authority of the government of the Philippine Islands in such amounts as it may determine, with the approval of the Secretary of War of the United States, from silver bullion purchased by the government of the Philippine Islands, with the approval of the Secretary of War of the United States: Provided, That the Philippine government may in addition and in its discretion recoin the Spanish Filipino dollars and subsidiary silver coins issued under the authority of the Spanish Government for use in the Philippine Islands into the subsidiary coins provided for in the preceding section at such rate and under such regulations as it may prescribe.

SEC. 9. That the silver dollar issued under authority of this act shall be legal tender in the Philippine Islands for all debts, public and private, except where otherwise provided by law or expressly stipulated in the contract, and the subsidiary silver coins authorized by this act shall be legal tender in the Philippine Islands to the amount of $10.

The weight of the 5-cent piece shall be 77.16 grains troy, and of the 1-cent piece 80 grains troy, and of the one-half-cent piece 40 grains troy.

SEC. 12. That the subsidiary and minor coinage hereinbefore authorized may be coined at the mint of the government of the Philippine Islands at Manila, or arrangements may be made by the said government with the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States for their coinage at any of the mints of the United States, at a charge covering the reasonable cost of the work.

SEC. 13. That the treasurer of the Philippine Islands is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to receive deposits of the silver dollars authorized by this act at the treasury of the government of the Philippine Islands or any of its branches in sums of not less than $20, and to issue silver certificates therefor in denominations of not less than $10, and the coin so deposited shall be retained in the Philippine treasury and held for the payment of such certificates on demand, and used for no other purpose. SEC. 14. That the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States is hereby authorized, when requested by the government of the Philippine Islands, to make and prepare any drawings, designs, and plates, and execute any engraving or printing of certificates authorized by the preceding section, and to make a proper charge for the same, covering as nearly as may be the actual cost, which shall be defrayed from the revenues of the Philippine Islands.

SEC. 15. That all provisions of law in force in the Philippine Islands making any form of money legal tender after December 31, 1905, except as provided in this act, are hereby repealed.

SEC. 16. That the government of the Philippine Islands shall have the power to make all necessary appropriations and all proper regulations for the redemption and reissue of worn or defective coins and for carrying out all other provisions of this act relating to coinage.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, the substitute which I have offered is one which was agreed to by the subcommittee of the Committee on the Philippines in regard to Philippine currency, consisting of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE], and myself. At the hearing which determined us to advocate this substitute the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] were present, as they were, I think, at nearly all of the hearings, and other Senators were consulted.

The Philippines Committee afterwards unanimously agreed to this proposed legislation, and it was unanimously passed by the Senate at the last session of this Congress. The reasons which controlled the Senate at that time are good to-day, the situation not having been changed in the slightest degree.

When that bill went to the House of Representatives we found that that body had passed a gold-standard bill for the Philippines. The Senate conferees would not yield the silver standard and the House conferees would not yield the gold standard, and in consequence no legislation was enacted at the last session of this Congress.

We are now confronted with this situation: The House was considering a bill the basis of which was to establish a mongrel currency system over there, rating silver on the basis of 32 to 1 and limiting its coinage. When that bill was presented to the House of Representatives a majority of that body substituted for it the currency system of the United States, which is the plain, unlimited gold standard.

The Philippines Committee of the Senate has now offered to you the bill as it was introduced in the other House, making the currency a limited one, establishing a ratio of 32 to 1 between gold and silver, and cutting down the value of the gold dollar one-half, somewhat in the manner of Japan. For that bill I introduced the substitute which has been read at the desk.

In my judgment, there is no necessity at the present time in the Philippines to warrant the Senate of the United States giving up its calm and deliberate judgment, which was formed after careful investigation and based on the testimony of men who are entirely familiar with conditions in that country, and who are themselves gold-standard men.

We are flying to another evil. If this bill which the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has introduced passes, we must then choose between this limited-coinage bill, fixing a ratio at 32 to 1, which gives a price for silver bullion beyond its market price now, or we must take the gold standard of the United States.

I am inclined to think, looking at this thing honestly and fairly, no matter what our opinions in regard to silver may have been in the past, that there would not be a handful of Senators here who would be in favor of the House bill. I doubt if there would be 10 Senators in this body who would be willing to fasten the United States gold standard on the Philippine people; yet that is the bill which has come to us from the House of Representatives.

I do not know what has induced the majority of the Philippines Committee and all of the members on the other side of this Chamber to change their minds as to what is the best currency for the Philippine Islands. We came to our conclusion at the last session after careful thought, study, and investigation; and now, because there is a fluctuation in the bullion value of silver, which in a measure deranges trade, we are asked to hastily do something which may be much worse than the present system in the Philippines; which is, of course, unsatisfactory.

I hope that the Senators on the other side will give some better reason for passing this bill than that we ought to pass some bill. I am quite sure that there is not a Senator on the other side of the Chamber who will say that the bill which they intend to pass now is a good bill, or that they expect it to remain upon the statute book, if passed. I imagine that all of those gentlemen who, after careful consideration gave their support to the substitute which I have offered, will give as a reason now for abandoning it, if they give any, that an emergency has arisen and something ought to be done to fix some kind of a stable currency, or something approaching it, in the Philippine Islands.

Before our subcommittee there came a Mr. Francis B. Forbes, from Massachusetts, a citizen of Boston, I think, who said that he was employed by Russell & Co. in China; that they had establishments all over China; that in 1862 he was their agent at Tientsin; that from 1863 to 1882 he was a partner in the firm of Russell & Co.; that from 1863 to 1882 he was nearly all of the time in Shanghai and was the managing partner from 1873 to 1882; and that he was for some years chairman of the Shanghai General Chamber of Commerce, and, as he expressed it, "in one way or another was more or less 'behind the scenes' as to political affairs." He says:

> Since I left China in 1882 I have kept in very close touch with economic and monetary questions connected with the East.

He further says:

> I have been able to find no evidence that the proposal to establish a gold standard in the Philippines, with silver token dollars for purely domestic use, is supported by any serious demand from the natives themselves or from the foreign merchants who trade with them.

Mr. Forbes says that he is a gold-standard advocate, but he insists that the silver standard should be used over there in the interest of those people; that they are accustomed to the use of silver money; that they have always traded with it, and that they can get along under that system much better and more profitably than they can under any other. I do not quote from him in full.

Then a Mr. Townsend appeared before us. I quote from his testimony the following:

> Senator ALLISON. Will you kindly state your occupation?
> Mr. TOWNSEND. I am agent for the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank.
> Senator ALLISON. Is that bank located where its name would indicate?
> Mr. TOWNSEND. It has an agency in New York, and branches all through China, Japan, India, and the Straits, and in the Philippines at Manila and Iloilo.
> Senator ALLISON. You also have a branch in New York?
> Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes, sir; and in San Francisco.

He further says:

> Although I am the representative of the largest bank engaged in the oriental business, I am not here in the interest of that bank, but merely appear to put at your disposal all the information I have likely to be useful to you when considering the very importaut matter of establishing a currency for the Philippines.

Then Mr. Townsend says:

> We must all recognize the importance at this stage of avoiding any mistakes, which might afterwards involve penalties, and establishing some system of currency on a tried and sound basis that can not lead to trouble. In my opinion there is only one such basis, and that is the "melting pot" or intrinsic value, and on this basis we are confined to a question of a straight gold or a straight silver currency. I am going to speak in favor of a straight, sound, full-weight silver dollar, the circulation of which is to be maintained and regulated by free coinage for anyone who will bring silver to the mint for coinage and pay the seigniorage, in the same manner as the mints are open in this country to the free coinage of gold.

Then he goes on with a careful argument.

Mr. George H. Macy, who is with Carter, Macy & Co., who have establishments in China and Japan, factories in Yokohama, and a house in Kobi, Japan, speaks on the same line. The testimony of these gentlemen is printed in full in a report of the hearings before a subcommittee of the Committee on the Philippines of the United States Senate at the last session of this Congress.

I repeat that all of the gentlemen who appeared before us are business men in that Eastern country, and they are all earnest advocates of the gold standard for the United States; that their testimony was clear that abandoning the silver standard in the Philippines would be a most hazardous experiment, and one which it would be difficult for the United States to maintain.

I do not intend to go into the arguments which we used or were used to us or which convinced the entire Senate in favor of the bill of last session, but I do hope that the advocates of this bill will give some better reason for its passage than that it is necessary to do something in the Philippine Islands. I should like to know from them if they will take the responsibility of saying that this proposed legislation will be adequate and satisfactory?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS]. [Putting the question.] The "noes" seem to have it.

Mr. TELLER. I ask for the yeas and nays on that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado demands the yeas and nays. Is there a second?

Mr. TELLER. I do not know that I care about having the yeas and nays. I will withdraw the request and let the matter pass.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will again put the question on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further amendments, the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole will again be ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator from Nevada allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. I did not desire to delay the passage of the bill which has just been passed, which I conceive to be of the utmost importance; but I now wish to say that the committee, who were convinced last year of the wisdom of the substitute which has been voted down, are now satisfied by the change of circumstances and in the rates of silver in the East that that legislation is no longer possible, and that some legislation in the nature of that embodied in the Senate bill is the only practicable way of dealing with the question at this time.

I do not want to delay the Senate by any further remarks or to trespass further upon the courtesy of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] in charge of the unfinished business.

Mr. FORAKER. I wish to ask the Senator from Massachusetts what bill it was of which he was speaking?

Mr. LODGE. I was speaking about the Philippine currency bill which has just been passed.

Mr. FORAKER. That bill has passed?

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mt. FORAKER. I understood the Senator to be referring to some other bill than that.

Mr. LODGE. I referred to the bill of last year with the silver clauses in the Philippine organization act which was lost in conference and which was offered this morning by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS] and voted down by the Senate, as a substitute for the bill which has just been passed.

I said I did not want to take the time of the Senate to explain why, in the judgment of the committee, that last year's legislation had now become impossible, but such was the judgment of the committee.

Mr. FORAKER. I thought the Senator was asking for some agreement as to a time when the tariff bill for the Philippine Islands might be taken up and voted on.

Mr. LODGE. No; I asked for no agreement.

OLD POINT COMFORT IMPROVEMENT COMPANY.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6212) to compensate the Old Point Comfort Improvement Company for the demolition and removal of the Hygeia Hotel property from the Government reservation at Old Point, Virginia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STEWART. I gave notice that I should call up the Indian appropriation bill this morning in order that its consideration might be completed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Nevada immediately after the consideration of the bill of the Senator from New York. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BURTON. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEWART. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15804) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes.

Mr. STEWART. I have one or two little amendments to offer. On page 37, line 10, after the word "dollars," I move to insert "to be immediately available."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There was an amendment pending when the bill was last under consideration, offered by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP].

Mr. STEWART. Let that be passed over for the present. Before we proceed to the consideration of other amendments, I should like to make some verbal corrections in the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] yield?

Mr. CLAPP. I do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 37, line 10, after the word "dollars," it is proposed to insert "to be immediately available."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. I also offer an amendment to correct a name, the appropriation in a former act having been made to the wrong person.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 53, after line 17, it is proposed to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to Joseph H. Lee, sr., of Cuba, Ariz., the sum of $3,700 for his property purchased within the external boundaries of the Navajo Indian Reservation, instead of to Earnest A. Lee, as provided by the Indian appropriation act, approved May 27, 1902.

Mr. STEWART. The object of the amendment is simply to correct a name.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. I also wish to correct a verbal error on page 38, line 3. I send the amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 38, line 3, before the word "employed," it is proposed to strike out "properly" and, after the word "employed," to insert "by their proper authorities," and in the same line, before the word "services," to insert "expenses and."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. I now ask that the amendment which I offered on Saturday last may be considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Minnesota will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 12, after line 7, it is proposed to insert:

For surveying, examining, appraising, logging, and selling the pine timber upon the ceded lands of the Chippewa Indian reservations in Minnesota, under the provisions of the act approved January 14, 1889, as amended by the act entitled "An act to amend the act entitled 'An act for the relief and civilization of the Indians in the State of Minnesota, approved January 14, 1889,' approved June 27, 1902," the sum of $90,000, to be reimbursed to the United States out of the proceeds of the sale of the timber upon said lands, $40,000 of which shall be immediately available.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MASON. I send to the Secretary's desk a proposed amendment, which I ask to have read, and also a letter from the Secretary of the Interior in support of the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, my understanding was that before original amendments were acted upon the amendments upon which the bill went over would be disposed of.

Mr. MASON. This will take but a moment.

Mr. STEWART. Let the amendment be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There was an amendment pending offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON] in a moment. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Pennsylvania will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the amendment just agreed to on page 37, line 10, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That the money hereby appropriated shall be applied only to the expenses incident to the survey, platting, and appraisement of town sites heretofore segregated or now in process of segregation, and not to any new addition to any town site heretofore established or segregated, and

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MASON. I now ask for the reading of the letter from the Secretary of the Interior recommending the adoption of the amendment I offered.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Let us first hear the amendment.

Mr. MASON. Very well; let the amendment be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the bottom of page 54 it is proposed to insert the following:

Whenever the Secretary of the Interior shall determine the same to be necessary for the purposes intended, the city of Lawton, in the Territory of Oklahoma, is hereby authorized and permitted to erect, maintain, and operate on section 29, township 2 north, range 11 west, in said Territory, and within the limits of the reservation created for the Fort Sill Boarding School, a pumping station, collecting gallery, reservoir, and such other appurtenant and necessary structures and pipe lines as may be required to furnish said city with a sufficient water supply.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Illinois ask that the letter from the Secretary of the Interior be read?

Mr. MASON. I do not care to have the letter read if the amendment is satisfactory to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. STEWART. Is the amendment recommended by that letter? I have not seen the letter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be read.

Mr. STEWART. Very well; let the letter be read.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I desire to understand what the amendment proposes. Does it authorize the Secretary of the Interior to construct a plant to light a city?

Mr. MASON. No.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Then let the amendment be read once more.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again stated.

The Secretary again read the amendment submitted by Mr. MASON.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter of the Secretary of the Interior will now be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 13, 1903.

The CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS,
United States Senate.

SIR: Under the act of June 30, 1902 (32 Stat., 506), providing a fund of $150,000 for municipal improvements in the city of Lawton, Okla., from which fund expenditures are to be made subject to the control and supervision of the Secretary of the Interior and upon the recommendation of the legally constituted authorities of said town, there are now pending in this Department plans and specifications for a waterworks system for the city of Lawton.

These papers show that the water for the system is to be obtained from a stratum of water-bearing gravel lying under the Indian school reservation to the northeast of the city. The Department has received from the engineer employed by the city a communication which shows that, although he made extensive tests and examinations of various suggested sources of water supply, the other sources than the one decided upon were at too great distance, or the quantity obtained too small, to make any of them worthy of recommendation, especially in view of the limited amount of money available for the waterworks.

The Department, on April 11, 1902, authorized the city to place on these lands, temporarily, until permanent arrangements could be made for a water supply, or the permit revoked by the Secretary, a pumping plant and a pipe line reaching therefrom to the limits of Lawton. This action of the Department was based on an application forwarded through Col. James F. Randlett, United States Indian Agent at Fort Sill, Okla., who transmitted with his letter a communication from James W. Haddon, superintendent of the Indian school. The superintendent stated, and the Indian agent concurred therein, that the establishment of the pumping plant as proposed will not be of any material detriment to the school, and he approved the proposed plan as being the most feasible one yet suggested for supplying the town of Lawton with water.

Some time after the temporary authority above referred to was granted, the city applied to have the privilege made permanent. This application was denied by the Department, and the applicants were advised that the Department had no authority to grant any permanent right or easement in or over the lands of said reservation of the character contemplated by the application under consideration. They were told that the power to grant such a privilege rests in Congress only.

At the time the temporary privilege was granted by the Department the plans and specifications for the waterworks plant had not been submitted for the approval of the Secretary. It appears that the city has not availed itself of the privilege granted temporarily, but that it proposed to erect, under the plans and specifications submitted to the Department, permanent pumping plant, collecting gallery, reservoir, etc., trusting to securing Congressional action in the future giving them permanent title to the land so occupied.

In view of the responsibility of the Secretary for the proper expenditure of the funds provided for the waterworks system, the Department does not feel warranted in authorizing the city to construct on the Indian school lands, under a mere temporary permission to occupy the lands, an expensive and permanent system of steam pumps, with pump house, reservoir, collecting gallery, and pipe line, involving a cost estimated at $40,000, although these structures are essential to a complete waterworks plant as designed for the city.

The city of Lawton has something over 5,000 inhabitants, and its buildings are most of them frame structures. The character of the buildings, with the high winds said to prevail there, make the danger from fires a very threatening one, especially in view of the absence of waterworks or an adequate supply of water from any source. The present principal source of supply is said to be a number of wells located on the Indian school lands, from which the water is pumped by hand and hauled to the city in barrels and tanks.

While the reports of the engineer employed by the city have been full and complete, and show that he has made a very extensive examination as to the possible sources of a water supply, resulting in the selection of the site located on the Indian school lands, the subject will receive a further examination by competent engineers in the employ of the Department before any final action is taken by the Secretary with regard to the proposed source of supply.

In order, however, that the city may not suffer a long delay in obtaining water for fire protection as well as for domestic use, in the event that the water-bearing stratum of gravel lying under the Indian school lands is found, after full examination, to be the best or only available source from which to get an adequate supply of good water, I have the honor to recommend that the paragraph herewith inclosed, which grants to the city of Lawton, when the Secretary shall determine the same to be necessary, the right to erect, maintain, and operate a pumping plant, reservoirs, collecting gallery, etc., on said Indian school lands, be added to the Indian appropriation bill for the year 1903-4.

Very respectfully, E. A. HITCHCOCK, Secretary.

Mr. STEWART. This amendment has not been before the Committee on Indian Affairs. We can not safely legislate in this way. However, I will not object to the amendment. We will look into it in conference, and if it is all right we will let it stay. Otherwise it will go out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there are no further amendments as in Committee of the Whole the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. QUARLES. There is a pending amendment reported by the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is an amendment which was passed over. It is at the bottom of page 33.

Mr. STEWART. It was passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 33, after line 22, it is proposed to insert the following:

In pursuance of the provisions of section 26 of an act to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Muscogee or Creek tribe of Indians, and for other purposes, approved March 1, 1901, there is hereby awarded, as a final determination thereof, on the so-called "loyal Creek claims" named in said section 26, the sum of $1,200,000, and the same is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and made immediately available. And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to pay, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to the loyal Creek Indians and freedmen named in articles 3 and 4 of the treaty with the Creek Nation of Indians of June 14, 1866, the said sum of $1,200,000, to be paid to such Indians and freedmen only whose names appear on the list of awards made in their behalf by W. B. Hazen and F. A. Field, as commissioners on behalf of the United States to ascertain the losses of said Indians and freedmen as provided in said articles 3 and 4; and such payments shall be made in proportion of the awards as set out in said lists and shall be in full settlement and satisfaction of all claims under said articles 3 and 4: Provided, however, That if any of said loyal Creek Indians or freedmen whose names are on said list of awards shall have died, then the amount or amounts due such deceased person or persons, respectively, shall be paid to their heirs or legal representatives: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to first withhold from the amount herein appropriated and pay to S. W. Peel, of Bentonville, Ark., the attorney of said loyal Creeks and freedmen, a sum equal to 10 per cent of the amount herein appropriated, as provided by written contracts between the said S. W. Peel and the claimants herein, the same to be payment in full for all legal and other services rendered by him, or those employed by him, and for all disbursements and other expenditures had by him in behalf of said claimants in pursuance of said contract. And further, said Secretary is authorized and directed to pay to David M. Hodge, a Creek Indian, of Tulsa, in the Creek Nation, a sum equal to 5 per cent of the amount herein appropriated, which payment shall be in full for all claims of every kind made by said David M. Hodge, or by those claiming under him, by reason of any engagement, agreement, or understanding had between him and said loyal Creek Indians.

Mr. QUARLES. I desire at the present time, if there is nothing else before the Senate, to call its attention for a moment to the amendment proposed by the committee, which was laid over the other day, beginning at the bottom of page 33. Is there an amendment now before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the amendment on page 33, which was passed over the other day. It is now before the Senate.

Mr. QUARLES. Very well, Mr. President.

It has occurred to me, sir, that the Senate ought to be advised as to the nature of this amendment and that it ought not to be passed, coming as it does solely from the committee, leaving the Senate entirely in ignorance of the fact that, in regard to this amendment, it is sitting as a court of arbitration and is not engaged in the ordinary method of legislation. Now, I rise to lay the facts before the Senate.

This is a provision which arises out of an agreement made with the Creek Nation in 1891, whereby it is provided that the Senate shall within two years sit in the capacity of a court of arbitration and decide upon this claim, which arises from several treaties made by this Government with the Creek Nation. The determination of the Senate upon this proposition will amount to an award, upon which an action will lie quite independently of the fate of this provision in the other House of Congress.

Mr. President, I had not the pleasure of being present in the Indian Committee when this matter was discussed and passed by the committee. I wish to say that after such investigation as I have been able to make this claim has no legal foundation whatever. It involves a large amount of money—$1,200,000—to be paid out of the National Treasury, largely to the citizens of the so-called loyal Creeks, and if the Senate, being possessed of the facts, shall conclude to give so large a sum as that as a gratuity, based upon a sentiment of gratitude or sympathy, I shall have no fault to find, but it has occurred to me that it is incumbent upon us to lay the facts briefly before the Senate, so that it can act intelligently in the matter.

Mr. President, in 1856 this, briefly stated, was the situation of affairs in the Creek Nation. I need hardly say that the Creek Nation has been a very powerful nation. It had been courageous and warlike, and had a great history. It had then been living for a number of years in its new home in the Indian Territory. Various treaties had been made by our Government with the Creeks, conferring upon them annuities and giving them other benefits and advantages; and among other things, the Creek Nation entered into a treaty of amity and friendship with our Government whereby it was provided in substance that if at any time the Creeks should take up arms against the Government they should forfeit all these annuities and all the benefits that might have accrued to them under the several treaties with this Government.

Now, that being the situation of affairs, and the Creeks having at that time accumulated a considerable amount of property, having comfortable homes, having horses and cattle and other personal property, the Government entered into another convention with the Creeks, which is the basic treaty upon which this claim is made. Section 18 of that treaty is in the following language. Now, this is made the basis of this claim:

> The United States shall protect the Creeks and Seminoles from domestic strife, from hostile invasion, and from aggression from other Indians and white persons not subject to their jurisdiction and laws, and from all injuries resulting from such invasion or aggression full indemnity is hereby guaranteed to the party or parties injured, out of the Treasury of the United States, upon the same principles and according to the same rules which white persons are entitled to indemnity for injuries or aggressions upon them committed by Indians.

Now, in the first place, I will call the attention of the Senate particularly to this phraseology, for I contend that that treaty stipulation does not cover the claim which is here made by the loyal Creeks. The indemnity which our Government promised them was for injuries inflicted by those who were not within the jurisdiction of the Creek Nation. That is a distinction which must not be lost sight of. Our Government was not agreeing to indemnify individuals of the Creek Nation for losses which they might sustain at the hands of their own brethren, but the stipulation was that the indemnity was to apply only to such losses as came from persons who were not within the jurisdiction of the Creek Nation. The object and purpose of this distinction are perfectly manifest to any man who gives it a thought, and the importance of this distinction will presently appear as we progress.

Now, Mr. President, these treaties relating to the relations of the Creeks to the Government must be read together. They are in pari materia and ought to be read together. If we do that, the treaty stipulations on both sides were substantially like this: The Government said, "If any injury comes to the Creeks from any source over which the Creek Nation has not jurisdiction, we will indemnify you for the loss." The Creek Nation on their side said, "We shall always remain loyal to the Government of the United States, and if we fail in our loyalty then we will suffer the penalty, by losing all the benefits of antecedent treaties."

That was the condition when the civil war broke out, and by reason of the geographical situation the Creek Nation was for a time in the storm center. Now, what happened? A large majority of the Creek Nation, estimated by some as high as two-thirds, entered into a treaty with the Confederate government, and not only that, but they took up arms against the Government of the United States. The minority of the Creek Nation, supposed to be about one-third, remained loyal and left their homes and their property, abandoned everything, and started north for the Kansas line to come within the Union lines for protection. I believe that while they were on their journey they fought several skirmishes with the hostile Creeks, augmented by some other bands who happened to be in that neighborhood. At all events, this minority of the Creeks eventually reached the Union line and enlisted in the Union Army and became very brave, and conducted themselves throughout with great credit.

Now, as soon as these loyal Creeks had left their homes, the disloyal Creeks, their brethren, began at once to prey upon their property. The ferocity of their Indian nature, which had been in abeyance for many years, seems to have been fanned into a flame at once, and the houses and barns and other property of the loyal Creeks were destroyed, their horses and cattle were confiscated, and great loss ensued.

But, Mr. President, it is obvious at the outset that this loss, in large part at least, came from the disloyal Creeks themselves. The further fact remains patent that if the Seminoles and the Creeks had remained loyal, this loss would never have occurred. They were abundantly able, if they had maintained their loyalty and preserved their treaty obligations, to have held their Territory for a long time against any assault that might have been made upon them. So this very loss was incurred, first, directly by the action of the disloyal Creeks, and indirectly was entirely caused by the disloyalty of the Creeks—the failure to stay and preserve their treaty obligations. So really the Creek Nation, as a nation, being responsible for the action of the majority of its members, was itself responsible for the loss which it is here asking us to pay.

Now, after the war, in 1866, we met those Creeks in council, and we framed a treaty with the Creeks in the city of Washington, which is found in 14 Statutes, and I wish to call the attention of the Senate for a few moments to that treaty. The claim of these loyal Creeks, which was a very persuasive one, and is to-day—I do not deny that—was there presented to the officers of the Government who were conducting that negotiation. The Government provided by that treaty that $100,000 of the Creek fund should be taken and distributed as far as it would go pro rata among the loyal Creeks.

Now, I pause a moment here, Mr. President, to suggest that that was the proper action to take as matter of law. The Creek Nation could not escape responsibility. The people who were making the treaty were treating with the nation and not with individuals, and the Creek Nation was responsible for this injury, and therefore it was for the Government to say that the Creek Nation should pay the hundred thousand dollars which should be distributed to these worthy loyal Creeks who had sustained this loss by reason of the failure of the Creek Nation to maintain and keep its treaty with us. That was the conclusion reached, and that agreement was carried out.

Now, in order that the hundred thousand dollars, which was known then to be only a small fraction of the total amount of the loss sustained by the loyal Creeks, might be distributed pro rata, the treaty provided that a census should be taken and that a commission should be appointed to ascertain the loss of each one of the Creek Indians; and it then provided that the hundred thousand dollars should be distributed pro rata according to the amount of loss as determined by the commission. Now, that was done. But a contention is made in support of this claim which seems to me entirely untenable. Article 4 of this treaty reads as follows:

> Immediately after the ratification of this treaty the United States agree to ascertain the amount due the respective soldiers who enlisted in the Federal Army, loyal refugee Indians and freedmen, in proportion to their several losses, and to pay the amount awarded each, in the following manner, to wit: A census of the Creeks shall be taken by the agent of the United States for said nation, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, and a roll of the names of all soldiers that enlisted in the Federal Army, loyal refugee Indians and freedmen, be made by him. The superintendent of Indian affairs for the southern superintendency and the agent of the United States for the Creek Nation shall proceed to investigate and determine from said roll the amounts due the respective refugee Indians, and shall transmit to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for his approval, and that of the Secretary of the Interior, their awards, together with the reasons therefor. In case the awards so made shall be duly approved, said awards shall be paid from the proceeds of the sale of said lands within one year from the ratification of this treaty—> or so soon as said amount of $100,000 can be raised from the sale of said land to other Indians.

It is contended that the section which I have just read warrants the construction that all of these losses so found by the commissioners should be paid. But, as I construe the section, it simply refers to a proper distribution of the $100,000 to be taken out of the Creek fund and involves this Government in no further obligation whatever.

Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to another proposition in this treaty. It is article 11:

> The stipulations of this treaty are to be a full settlement of all claims of said Creek Nation for damages and losses of every kind growing out of the late rebellion, and all expenditures by the United States of annuities in clothing and feeding refugee and destitute Indians since the diversion of annuities for that purpose consequent upon the late war with the so-called Confederate States; and the Creeks hereby ratify and confirm all such diversions of annuities heretofore made from the funds of the Creek Nation by the United States, and the United States agree that no annuities shall be diverted from the objects for which they were originally devoted by treaty stipulations with the Creeks to the use of refugee and destitute Indians other than the Creeks or members of the Creek Nation after the close of the present fiscal year, June 30, 1866.

I call attention to that because it involves this proposition: During the war the Government, acting under the former treaty to which I have referred, took the liberty of diverting all the annuities of the Creek Nation while the Creeks remained in hostility.

It is true that no proclamation of the President was issued, but the Government did, by virtue of that treaty, assume to forfeit, and did forfeit, all these annuities from the Creek Nation.

It was provided here that there should be "no further forfeiture after the close of the present fiscal year." It has been claimed that another clause in that treaty resuscitated the old treaty, and that the treaty which I first referred to, furnishing indemnity to the Creeks, had by virtue of this treaty been resuscitated, so that it was never in suspension at all.

I call attention to this language to show that the intention of the Government officers who were negotiating this treaty clearly expressed here that that forfeiture should cease at a date named, and they were not providing by this treaty for the resuscitation during the war period of the old treaty, but providing a new treaty from which again new obligations should spring out of the renewed treaty.

In article 14 it is stipulated and provided that "all forfeitures inconsistent with this treaty shall be set aside." Therefore, Mr. President, it is conclusive that this renewal of amity with the Creeks did not revive the treaty of 1856 during the period of their disloyalty.

Now, Mr. President, I am not left, offering the Senate my opinion on this matter of construction, alone and unsupported, but I have here a decision of the Court of Claims where the very matter was considered and the interpretation adopted which I have tried to outline to the Senate. That report will be found in the nineteenth volume of the Court of Claims Reports, beginning on page 675. A petition was presented on behalf of the nation to enforce this claim, and on the 25th of February, 1884, the defendant—that is, the Government—filed a demurrer, and the court held——

Mr. SPOONER. Will my colleague allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. QUARLES. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. Was that suit brought by special authority of Congress?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It was referred by the Department.

Mr. QUARLES. It was referred by the Department to the Court of Claims.

Mr. SPOONER. Under the Bowman Act?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Under the Tucker Act or the Bowman Act.

Mr. QUARLES. The court passed upon the question of law on page 678, and held as a conclusion of law—

That all claims which the petitioners had against the United States for damages and losses growing out of the late rebellion were adjusted, settled, and released by the treaty of 1866—

Which is the treaty from which I have just read—and the payment thereunder of $100,000, as provided in article 3, and that the claimants, having received that sum, are not entitled to be paid any further amount.

The court discussed other features and imposed upon these treaties the very construction which I have contended for here, and that stands, so far as I know, the law applicable to this case.

Now, Mr. President, I have no hostility against these loyal Creeks. On the other hand, I find myself embarrassed by the sympathy that I feel for them. There is no doubt in the world that they were loyal and faithful men. There is no doubt in the world that they sustained this loss and that the loss was greater than the amount they are asking at the hands of the Senate sitting here as a court of arbitration.

But, Mr. President, I am reminded that during the same period when this supposed claim arose there were along the borders of this country thousands and tens of thousands of loyal men whose property was destroyed. They lived there on the border in that trying time when it cost something to maintain loyalty to the Government and the flag, when the Confederate Army would sweep across their fields and then, driven back again by the Union Army, it would come back with the force of a cyclone, destroying what had been left by the advancing army. Very many of those men went prematurely to their graves, their families were turned out of their comfortable homes, they became outcasts, and no one can describe the sufferings that they endured.

If it were proper, sir, I would be willing that the children of those sterling, loyal worthies might receive something at the hands of Congress as a token of gratitude for their distinguished and unselfish service. But no appeal can be made here so eloquent or forceful as to bring a dollar to those people, who are as well entitled to the gratitude of the country and the consideration of Congress as the claimants who are asking for this gratuity of $1,200,000.

Mr. President, we are not able to do what it would please us all to do. The only question now before the Senate, sitting here as a court of arbitration, knowing full well that there is no legal foundation for this claim, is, shall we, in view of our gratitude to these men, in view of our sympathy for their children, pass over to them out of the Treasury $1,200,000 of the people's money. Can we justify it upon the ground of gratitude or sympathy? That is the question; and I felt, Mr. President, that the Senate at least ought to know from some member of the committee that it was not sitting here on this measure simply as the Senate of the United States but as a court, as a tribunal of arbitration, to render an award upon which an action might be brought.

Now, if I have been able to make the Senate understand the situation, the facts, the principles that underlie this amendment, I have done all that I set out to do, for I shall not be outdone by any gentleman who may speak upon this subject in my admiration of the loyalty and courage of these worthy men. As to the attorney who is provided for in this amendment, although the fee may seem large, I believe he has earned his fee. I know these Creek people. I have been among them in their homes. I have seen them in their legislative chamber. I know very well the other gentleman by the name of Hodge, who will get a part of this sum, and I know that his service for his people well entitles him to compensation.

If the Senate shall conclude, sitting here in the capacity I have described, that on the grounds of sympathy and gratitude it can justify itself in passing over this large sum to those people, I shall certainly not feel any tinge of disappointment, but shall have satisfied my conscience by laying the facts before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. PETTUS. I ask that the amendment be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again read.

The SECRETARY. On page 33, after line 21, insert:

In pursuance of the provisions of section 26 of an act to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Muscogee or Creek tribe of Indians, and for other purposes, approved March 1, 1901, there is hereby awarded, as a final determination thereof, on the so-called "loyal Creek claims" named in said section 26, the sum of $1,200,000, and the same is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and made immediately available. And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to pay, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to the loyal Creek Indians and freedmen named in articles 3 and 4 of the treaty with the Creek Nation of Indians of June 14, 1866, the said sum of $1,200,000, to be paid to such Indians and freedmen only whose names appear on the list of awards made in their behalf by W. B. Hazen and F. A. Field, as commissioners on behalf of the United States to ascertain the losses of said Indians and freedmen as provided in said articles 3 and 4; and such payments shall be made in proportion of the awards as set out in said list, and shall be in full settlement and satisfaction of all claims under said articles 3 and 4: Provided, however, That if any of said loyal Creek Indians or freedmen whose names are on said list of awards shall have died, then the amount or amounts due such deceased person or persons, respectively, shall be paid to their heirs or legal representatives: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to first withhold from the amount herein appropriated and pay to S. W. Peel, of Bentonville, Ark., the attorney of said loyal Creeks and freedmen, a sum equal to 10 per cent of the amount herein appropriated, as provided by written contracts between the said S. W. Peel and the claimants herein, the same to be payment in full for all legal and other services rendered by him, or those employed by him, and for all disbursements and other expenditures had by him in behalf of said claimants in pursuance of said contract. And further, said Secretary is authorized and directed to pay to David M. Hodge, a Creek Indian, of Tulsa, in the Creek Nation, a sum equal to 5 per cent of the amount herein appropriated, which payment shall be in full for all claims of every kind made by said David M. Hodge, or by those claiming under him, by reason of any engagment, agreement, or understanding had between him and said loyal Creek Indians.

Mr. PETTUS. I should like to inquire if this amendment has been estimated for by any of the departments?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I do not think it has, but it is in compliance with two or three treaty stipulations made between the Creek Nation and the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 12543) to enable the people of Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico to form constitutions and State governments and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States.

Mr. STEWART. I ask that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada asks that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, in order that the Senate may proceed with the consideration of the appropriation bill. Is there objection?

Mr. QUAY. There is no objection, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears none.

Mr. CLAPP. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of line 22, page 28, the following:

That any person who has heretofore intermarried with a citizen, a member of the Cherokee Nation of Indians in the Indian Territory, and by virtue of such marriage is, according to the laws and constitution of the Cherokee Nation, a member of said tribe, and who has been excluded from sharing equally with other Cherokee citizens in the disbursement of moneys heretofore paid out per capita by said nation to their people, may, within ninety days after the approval of this act, institute and prosecute his or her suit in the United States Court of Claims against the Cherokee Nation of Indians for the purpose of recovering from said Cherokee Nation his or her pro rata share of all moneys disbursed as aforesaid from which he or she was wrongfully excluded. Said suit or suits may be brought in the name of the claimant by filing his or her petition in said court, setting out the facts upon which said claimant relies to secure judgment in his or her favor.

Any citizen or citizens of the Cherokee Nation by blood may intervene in any such suit, and may raise before the courts all questions as to the right of the intermarried persons to participate in the distribution of the common property of said nation, of whatever kind or character; and if the suit hereinbefore provided for shall not be commenced as herein limited, then any citizen or citizens of the Cherokee Nation by blood may, within six months after the approval of this act, institute and prosecute his or their suit in said court against the Cherokee Nation to determine all the rights of said intermarried persons to participate in the distribution of the common property of said nation, of whatever kind or character, and said Court of Claims is hereby given jurisdiction to hear and determine such suit: Provided, That such intermarried persons, or any of them, shall have the right to intervene in such suit and defend the same.

And provided further, That if suit is brought under this section by any citizens of the Cherokee Nation by blood, at least 10 unmarried persons shall be made parties defendant in such action, and notice of the pendency of such action or actions shall be published for sixty days in at least three newspapers published in said Territory, and any intermarried person may intervene within thirty days after the last such publication.

That the said Court of Claims is hereby invested with full jurisdiction to hear and determine all such suits according to the rules of law and equity, and may consider all treaty provisions touching the same; also the laws and constitution of the Cherokee Nation. And said Court of Claims may allow either party to take evidence, to the end that a full understanding of the facts may be reached and justice done by said court between the parties. Said court may render such judgment as the law and facts may warrant. If in favor of the claimant or claimants, the judgment shall fix the amount of money due such claimant or claimants, and direct that said amount be charged against the Cherokee Nation of Indians and deducted from any moneys that they may have in the Treasury of the United States and be paid to said claimants; and said court, in said judgment, shall fix the amount due the attorney or attorneys of record for their legal services, as stipulated by contracts between said claimants and said attorneys, and shall in said judgment, direct that the accounting officers of the United States shall deduct from the amount due each claimant the attorney fee allowed in said judgment, and pay the same directly to said attorneys, and shall pay the balance to the claimants. Service shall be executed on said nation by causing a copy of the petition to be delivered to the principal chief of said nation, who shall demur or answer the same within sixty days after such service. Such suits shall have precedence and be advanced upon the docket.

That either party may appeal from any final judgment of said court to the Supreme Court of the United States within thirty days after the rendition of said judgment; and the Supreme Court is hereby vested with full jurisdiction to hear and determine said suits on appeal in the same manner as appeals from other courts of the United States; and said cases shall have precedence and be advanced upon the docket. The Attorney-General shall appoint some person from the Department of Justice to defend all suits instituted under this act, and shall be duly served with a copy of any petition filed as commencement of suit.

Mr. STEWART. I desire to make a point of order against the amendment. The committee considered it to some extent, but could not come to a conclusion upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada will state the point of order.

Mr. STEWART. The point of order is that it is legislation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I offer an amendment to come in on page 37, after line 2.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 37, after line 2, insert:

The United States courts in the Indian Territory may appoint as guardian or curator of minors or incompetents, including the minors and incompetents of any tribes or nations of said Territory, trust companies or other companies of a fiduciary character which may be approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. I move as an amendment to make the totals conform. I send the corrected totals to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will correct the totals as indicated by the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. RAWLINS. I move to strike out, on page 43 of the bill, from line 13 to line 20, inclusive.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 43, strike out from line 13 down to and including line 20, in the following words:

For the resurvey and marking of the southern and western boundaries of the Uintah Indian Reservation from the initial point on Green River to the intersection of said boundary line with the range line between ranges 6 and 7, east of Sac and Lake meridian, Utah, an estimated distance of 135 miles, at $40 per mile, and for the field examination of said resurvey, $6,000.

Mr. STEWART. I have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair desires to call the attention of the Senator from Pennsylvania to a resolution offered by him on Saturday, which went over under the rule. The Chair has had no opportunity to lay it before the Senate this morning.

Mr. QUAY. The resolution, I suppose, will go to the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go to the Calendar.

Mr. QUAY. It is a matter of no consequence. I introduced in the order of resolutions the same resolution to-day, and it will come up as an original proposition to-morrow.

Mr. MILLARD. I offer an amendment, to come in at the end of the bill.

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of the bill the following:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed, upon the passage of this bill, to pay to such Omaha Indians belonging to the tribe located in Nebraska, over 21 years of age, as shall be found competent and capable of managing and taking care of their own affairs, their pro rata share of the permanent fund now to the credit of the tribe in the Treasury of the United States: Provided, That such of said Indians as receive their pro rata share of said fund under this provision shall not hereafter participate in the payment of interest or principal on that portion of the fund that shall remain for the benefit of minors and incompetents, this, however, not to debar those who receive such pro rata shares from participating in the distribution of any further proceeds received from the sale of lands after the passage of this act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. On page 39, line 18, I move to strike out from the word "dollars" down to and including line 21. This amendment is moved in accordance with the action of the committee. The clause was left in the bill by mistake.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada moves an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 39, line 18, after the word "dollars," where it first occurs, strike out the following:

That the sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as is necessary, is hereby appropriated, to be immediately available, for the purpose of aiding indigent full-blood Mississippi Choctaws to remove to the Indian Territory.

Tne amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I was not present on Saturday afternoon when this bill was up for consideration, but I notice from the RECORD that the point of order made by the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] against an amendment by the Senate committee which provides that rations shall not be withheld from Indian children not in attendance at Government schools. The RECORD shows that the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] asked that the matter might go over until to-day. I should like to inquire from that Senator whether it is proposed to consider the matter or to allow it to remain as it is?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I asked that the matter might go over on Saturday, because I did not think that the point of order was good. Upon looking into it I became satisfied that the point of order was good, and I did not propose to pursue the matter any further. I believe that a very great wrong is done these Indians by withholding rations from them when they send their children to schools other that Government schools. I think it is a wrong that if the Senate had time to fairly look into it would probably right; but I believe that the point of order will lie against the amendment as it stands, and I thought it was useless to make any further resistance to it.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I realize, as does the Senator from Arkansas, that the point of order that this is general legislation is well taken, but I want to make one observation in regard to points of order, for I probably will never have an opportunity again to discuss the question here.

My experience in a great many years of service in this body is that the Senate of the United States—that is, the majority—generally does what it wants to do, without regard to the rules. I never have known an instance when the sentiment in the Senate was decidedly in favor of certain legislation that the rule was not overridden and disregarded if the Senate could possibly get a vote as to the rule.

Now, without being hypercritical, I want to call attention to one particular in regard to legislation on appropriation bills. In the Fifty-sixth Congress, at the last session, an amendment was placed upon a general appropriation bill, I believe the Army bill, on motion of the senior Senator from Wisconsion [Mr. SPOONER], providing that the President of the United States should appoint such officers as he saw proper to appoint in the Philippine Islands with such powers as he saw proper to give them. That is the most extraordinary provision in the statutes of the United States from the beginning of the Government. No such power was ever heard of until that amendment was adopted in a general appropriation bill. It was not only general legislation, but it was not germane to the subject, and, in my opinion, directly in contravention of the Constitution. Nothing like it was ever heard of, unless it be the power given to Thomas Jefferson, President of the United States, to fill the offices existing in Louisiana at the time of the purchase of that Territory until Congress should otherwise legislate. But even in that case no Senator was daring enough to intimate that the President should have the power to indicate what authority these officers might have; he simply changed the personnel, if he saw proper to do so. The offices continued to exist in the Territory under American jurisdiction as they had existed under the dominion of Spain.

A point of order was made against what is called the Spooner amendment, to which I have alluded, and it was overruled in the Senate. That amendment was adopted and the administration of the islands carried on under it for months.

At the present session of Congress the Army appropriation bill was reported from the Military Committee, and it contained an amendment by the committee providing a general staff system for the Army, which was unquestionably general legislation, and yet no point of order was made in regard to it, even if a point of order had been thought of.

Now, Mr. President, I would suggest that we ought to be consistent in regard to this matter. If we propose to enforce the rule, it ought to be done without exception. If, on the other hand, the Senate determines to legislate as it pleases without regard to the rule, that ought to be understood.

Here we are confronted with the fact that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in direct violation, as I believe, of the Constitution of the United States, undertakes to starve the Indians, the father, the mother, and the children of school age——

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. And in plain violation of the treaties.

Mr. VEST. Yes; and in plain violation of solemn treaties by which we obtained their land they do not get their rations unless these children are sent to Government schools. Attorney-General Knox sustained the validity of this order of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and cited the constitutional provision in regard to the freedom of conscience and the free exercise of religion by all persons within the jurisdiction of this Government. I should be obliged to any lawyer or Senator to tell me how the order of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs agrees with the Constitution of the United States, which says there shall be no discrimination on account of religious opinion or membership in any religious sect.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator from Missouri yield to me for a statement?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator from Missouri does not quite do the Commissioner of Indian Affairs justice. He ruled the other way. Then the question was submitted to the Attorney-General, and the Attorney-General thought that rations ought not to be delivered to the Indians or their children when the children attended sectarian schools.

Mr. VEST. That is true. In 1900 the Commissioner of Indian Affairs made an order one way, and in 1901, under the opinion of Attorney-General Knox, he ruled the other way.

But the salient point in my argument is that as the matter now stands—I will not call it the law, because I deny that that order of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is the law or should be called the law—but I affirm that the status of the question now is that unless an Indian father and mother send their children to a Government school, no matter what they think in regard to the education of those children, not only the father and mother, but the children, are refused rations, so that the whole family may starve unless they change their religious opinion and come within that order.

The power to discriminate against any religious sect is the power to destroy it. I lay down that proposition, and I defy anyone to contradict it. The Constitution of the United States means, and every commentator has said so, the Supreme Court has said so, that there shall be no discrimination on account of religious opinion or the exercise of any religious opinion, and here we have this outrageous and infamous order, which says that poor, innocent children shall be refused the rations to which they are entitled under treaty unless they are sent to the Government schools.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Will the Senator from Missouri permit me to make a suggestion?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. As I understand it, practically the Department goes to an extent which makes the condition even worse than stated by the Senator from Missouri. Even in cases where there are no Government schools to which those children can be sent, if they are sent to a school other than the Government school, then the whole family are deprived of the Government rations to which they are entitled by their treaties.

Mr. VEST. That is true, Mr. President; that is the effect of the order.

It is astonishing how little attention is paid to any right, constitutional or otherwise, of the Indians. The President of the United States in his Life of Thomas H. Benton—a wonderfully interesting work—says that the North American Indians have been treated with great justice and clemency by the superior race, our race. I do not agree with the President. I think they have been shamefully robbed.

I happened once to be a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate, and I was assigned to a subcommittee to visit the Indian schools of Wyoming and Montana. I went to every Indian school, whether under the control of the Government or under the Jesuits or others. I think I have said, and I repeat, I never saw a single Government day school that was worth one cent to the Indians or did anything to advance them toward Christianity and civilization.

I remember now perfectly—I believe I have stated it before—the visit I made to Fort Shaw, in Montana, a fort now abolished. General Brooke was then in command. There were Crow, Blackfeet, and some Turtle Mountain Indians some 40 miles distant. It was surrounded by a stockade. I stayed there two days and found eight hundred and ninety odd children enrolled, when there had not been ten in attendance at the school on any one day, unless it was on the ration day, when meat was distributed amongst them. The agent was a superannuated clergyman from Rhode Island. There were two teachers of this school, who were his daughters, and they admitted, as I found out personally on examination, that these Indian children were taught nothing, not even the simplest rules of arithmetic or grammar, and yet $2,800 was paid out of the Treasury of the United States to these teachers, and reports are made at every session of Congress in behalf of these day schools.

Now, if an Indian is a Catholic and his wife is a Catholic, as many of them are, and wants to send his children at his own expense to a Catholic school, to a private school, the children are to be starved. Notwithstanding the treaty provides for furnishing rations to them, the Indian and his wife or squaw are to be starved, in defiance of the Constitution and the treaty, unless his children are sent to a day school.

If there is any way in a committee of conference to put any provision in the bill to remedy this great outrage, I hope it may be done.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

OLD POINT COMFORT IMPROVEMENT COMPANY.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 6212) to compensate the Old Point Comfort Improvement Company for the demolition and removal of the Hygeia Hotel property from the Government reservation at Old Point, Virginia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill named by him. Is there objection?

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, in the absence of my colleague [Mr. NELSON], I feel constrained to object to the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota objects to the present consideration of the bill, and it will retain its place on the Calendar.

STATEHOOD BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The omnibus statehood bill is before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12543) to enable the people of Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico to form constitutions and State governments, and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator in charge of the statehood bill to yield to me for an explanation based on a question of personal privilege and privileges as a Senator, which I feel that it is incumbent upon me to make to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. QUAY. Certainly; but as I understand the parliamentary situation, the Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW] is really entitled to the floor, is he not?

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, I am entitled to the floor upon the statehood bill, but I have agreed to yield for to-day to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. I do not know what time he will take, but I wish to state that I desire very much to close my remarks to-morrow, and that when the statehood bill then comes up, I hope to continue and conclude my argument.

Mr. QUAY. Certainly; but there is no objection to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] taking the floor at this time. I think he is within his rights, anyway.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator from Alabama allow me to make an explanation?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. MORGAN. I do.

Mr. TILLMAN. It has been my intention for the past three weeks to make some remarks on the Indianola post-office matter in answer to the speech of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr.

SPOONER]. I did not know that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] desired to have anything to say this morning, and I had made an arrangement with the Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW] to speak; but the Senator from Alabama is desirous of taking time, and as the Senator from New York wants to get through to-day, in order that he may leave the city, I shall have to defer my speech, I presume, until to-morrow. So I will give notice now that immediately after the routine morning business to-morrow I shall ask the privilege of addressing the Senate on the Indianola post-office matter—I do not know under what head or under what order of business, but I suppose by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York stated that he desired to go on to-morrow morning, relinquishing the floor to-day.

Mr. TILLMAN. Well, I will accommodate myself to the wishes of the Senator from New York and the Senator from Alabama and get in some time to-morrow; I can not tell exactly when.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] is recognized.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—AFFAIRS IN COLOMBIA.

Mr. MORGAN. I rise to a question of privilege as a Senator, which I think is a matter of some importance, and then I shall leave the disposition of the matter entirely to the Senate.

The Washington Post of February 14, 1903, contains a copy of a paper which must be a telegram, although it purports to be a letter, dated at the city of Mexico, February 13, which is addressed to me by Señor Reyes, the Colombian minister to Mexico, as the signature imports, which I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

MORGAN ASKED TO RETRACT—THE COLOMBIAN MINISTER TO MEXICO WRITES TO THE SENATOR—ATTACK ON REPUTATION AND INTEGRITY OF A RECENT CHIEF EXECUTIVE OF COLOMBIAN GOVERNMENT DECLARED UNJUST.

MEXICO CITY, February 13, 1903.

The Mexican Herald publishes the following telegram, sent to Senator MORGAN at Washington by Gen. Rafael Reyes, minister from Colombia at this capital:

MEXICO, February 13.

Senator MORGAN, Washington, D. C.:

I read in to-day's paper that in a session of the Senate on the 12th instant you declared that a recent chief executive of the Colombian Government had sold out and abdicated for a million dollars. According to the Colombian constitution the chief executives are the President and Vice-President. The last President was Señor Don Manuel Antonio Sanclemente, a venerable old man of over 80 years, whose reputation for integrity is widespread in all Spanish-American nations, and who died a few months ago, and the Vice-President in charge of the executive office at the present time is Señor Don José Manuel Marroquin, whose uprightness is as well known as that of the former. Neither of the two abdicated, and therefore the charge you have uttered is false.

I must suppose, having regard to the respect which is due to the Senate of the United States and to all nations of the globe, to your own age and integrity, and to justice and truth, that in making the assertion in question you have given credence to false and malicious reports, the origin of which I invite you to publish. And I must expect that, acting with the courage and sturdy honesty of the men of the school of George Washington, among whom towers the present Executive Chief of your nation, you will, in fairness, fulfill your duty of rectifying a charge as injurious as false against my country.

RAFAEL REYES,
Colombian Minister to Mexico.

Mr. MORGAN. If I had said, at any time, that Sanclemente had abdicated, it would be incorrect, since he was turned out of his office by a decree of the supreme court of Colombia in September, 1900, when Marroquin, being Vice-President, succeeded him as President.

Señor Reyes says he read in "to-day's paper," in Mexico, of course, "that in a session of the Senate on the 12th instant you declared that a recent chief executive of the Colombian Government had sold out and abdicated for a million dollars."

This is the only accusation Señor Reyes makes against me personally, except that the statement is false.

If anything relating to Sanclemente was said by me on the 12th of February it must have been in the secret executive sessions of the Senate. The public records of the Senate show that I did not utter a word in the Senate on that day in the open session, and that the Senate was in executive session for five hours, and at 5 o'clock and 25 minutes the Senate adjourned.

That words alleged to have been spoken in the Senate on the 12th of February should be published in the Mexican Herald on the 13th and should appear in the Washington Post on the 14th of February shows wonderful speed in the business of "scooping," as this occupation is called, and, if it is legitimate and for the good of the country, shows astonishing progress in civilization. If it is bad and is intended to facilitate base projects of promoters in handling $50,000,000 spot cash and $25,000,000 of Government obligations for one hundred years, to be followed by $250,000 of annual dues to be paid as long as the United States shall hold the lease of the canal, it is very unworthy enterprise.

The same statements, in substance, are made as to my course in the Senate in the Philadelphia Inquirer of the 14th of February. I will ask the Secretary to read the article from that paper, as it questions my motives and actions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

SENATOR MORGAN BLOCKING THE CANAL.

The attitude of Senator MORGAN toward the Panama Canal is entirely incomprehensible. It is inconceivable that one who has been so sturdy an advocate of the enterprise should develop into an obstructionist of the most pronounced type when he finds that he can not have his favorite Nicaragua route; that the sense of Congress is that the canal should be constructed across the Isthmus from Colon to Panama.

His arguments against the treaty are childish. We are to pay ten million dollars instead of seven, hence it is his opinion that three millions are to go to revolutionists as the price of peace. We are to make a yearly payment of $250,000, and to him it is plain that much of this money will go into the private pockets of individuals of Colombia. He declares that the existing Government has no power to make treaties; hence the instrument is not valid. He has even discovered a religious question as a bar, and he is certain that in the end we shall have war with Colombia if we ratify the treaty.

Mr. MORGAN may hold the canal up so long as he has breath enough to make speeches and offer amendments, and he confesses that he has 30 on hand and no one knows how many more in cold storage, but it is beyond his power to stop the wheels of progress except temporarily. What business is it of ours what Colombia does with the money we pay her? If a few persons in a position to do so divide the yearly payments, that is a matter for the natives to settle among themselves. It is none of our affair. As for the authority of their existing Government, it is good enough for our purposes.

Suppose a chief executive did abdicate, as Mr. MORGAN says, for a million dollars; suppose presidents continue to abdicate in the future for all they can get; such things are but mere incidents of their style of conducting affairs. Our friends of Colombia can indulge in revolutions twice a day until they get good and tired of the whole thing if they wish. It is their form of amusement. They wouldn't be happy unless there was quarreling somewhere. It interests us no more than the bull fights of Madrid. It is sufficient for us as a nation that there be a de facto ruler of Colombia; that he draw up a treaty and that the Colombian Congress ratify it. That is all that we require. As for the rest we will look out for that.

War! War with Colombia? That is the most ridiculous feature of the whole Morgan argument. Great guns! We wonder if the news of a proclamation of hostilities would cause securities to decrease one-fourth of 1 per cent.

That canal is an enterprise of great importance to the entire commercial world. It is going to be built, and Mr. MORGAN might as well understand that neither he nor even the Colombian Government itself, even if the latter were disposed to do so, can prevent it. We expect to see the Colombian Congress, which has not yet been elected, ratify the treaty. If not, then it will become a question of what our own Congress should do in the matter. And yet there ought not to be any real question, either. All that it would have to do—and the action would be perfectly justifiable—would be to authorize the President to purchase the French property and without further ado go ahead and construct. If the title was good enough for France—and it was—it ought to be good enough for us as the successor in ownership, and it is.

But we do not believe that such steps will be necessary; only if the contingency should arise, we could and should take them.

Mr. MORGAN. The act of Congress of June 28, 1902, seems to have no effect in controlling the fierce determination of this great paper to build a canal at Panama, despite all the opposition that Colombia can make, and Señor Reyes seems to be equally determined on the success of that scheme, despite all the purposes of honest men in the Senate and elsewhere to obey the laws of the United States.

The coincidence of their double assault upon me is fine enough in its tactics to have been devised in the Panama Canal school of diplomacy, and is brazen enough in its insolence to have been prepared in the office of a New York railroad wrecker.

The statements made in the letter of Señor Reyes and in the article above quoted are so nearly identical that they must have come from the same source of information; and as those statements are not found in the official record of Congress, they have been falsely made, or surreptitiously obtained from those eavesdroppers that are in constant attendance on the Senate or in it. For more than twenty-five years I have witnessed the abuse of Senators by this unpatriotic and scandalous system of espionage and eavesdropping, or of betrayal by persons who have had the right or the privilege of being present at the executive sessions of the Senate; and I have long since ceased to expect anything else.

It is a cowardly form of calling a Senator in question for his remarks or statements made in the confidence of executive sessions and of reliance on the honor of those who hear them, because the Senator who is called to account in newspapers, or in telegrams, such as that of Señor Reyes, can neither admit, deny, or explain what is alleged to have taken place in executive sessions without violating an honorable duty to the Senate, no matter though it may be necessary for the sake of the truth or for the safety of his own character.

The evil seems to be without remedy, and the only safety any Senator can have is in the open sessions of the Senate. I will make no statement in reply to Señor Reyes as to what occurred in an executive session of the Senate, although he says in his telegram to me, through a newspaper, which he did not send me, "The charge you have uttered is false," and although he challenges me to make a statement, using the following opprobious language:

And I must expect that, acting with the courage and sturdy honesty of the men of the school of George Washington, among whom towers the present

Executive Chief of your nation, you will in fairness fulfill your duty of rectifying a charge as injurious as false against my country.

Señor Reyes has the reputation of being a somewhat distinguished man, and feels, no doubt, supersensitive about the condition and conduct of a Government that he represents as minister at a foreign court, but that can be no excuse for demanding of me an explanation that relates to the advice and consent that a Senator of the United States is required to give the President of the United States in the negotiation and ratification of a treaty, even if it should involve a free and full inquiry into the character of another Government, as to its conduct and that of its representatives.

Such advice and consent has been given by Senators, in free discussion, in the presence of George Washington, who came personally into the executive sessions of the Senate to hear their advisements, but not to vote upon them or to criticise or scout them.

Senators are not supposed to be inferior to the President when they exercise the constitutional right of advising him and of consenting or refusing to consent to a treaty he has negotiated; much less are they amenable to rebuke or denunciation at the hands of the President for expressing their opinions freely about a government or a people with whom he has concluded a treaty, or to inquire of him about their public and responsible officers. Character is the element that is the first to be considered with reference to the faith that is to be reposed in the making and observance of treaties, and a government that has a bad character among its own people has no right to complain if we decline to treat with it on that ground without taking upon ourselves the onus of vindicating its right to a better reputation.

The flattering of an American President by classing him in "the school of George Washington, among whom towers the present Executive Chief," with the purpose of presenting a degrading contrast with Senators, or a Senator, is not likely to lift the President above his constitutional duty or his sense of propriety in his intercourse with his constitutional advisers, but it tends directly to impugn the Government, of which the Senate is a constitutional part, that holds a positive veto upon a concluded negotiation which one-third of a quorum of that body can make absolute.

If Señor Reyes had made such a personal attack through the press upon a privy counsellor of the King of Great Britain for advice alleged to be given or for facts stated in council, his conduct would not be less offensive or more justifiable or excusable, and would be severely resented. And as he makes his diatribe against me official by signing it as "Colombian minister to Mexico," his Government, if it is not too weak and uncertain in its authority to be responsible, will disclaim the insult thus given to the tribunal that exercises the treaty-making power of the United States in cooperation with the President.

It is a bad outlook for the happiness of such close relations as a canal treaty must necessarily create between Colombia and the United States when the "Colombian minister to Mexico" feels himself at liberty to assume a state of facts as to the alleged utterances of a Senator that he could not honorably know anything about, as a predicate for virulent personal abuse of a Senator who is exercising his right of honest inquiry into the character of Colombia as a government.

If a Cabinet officer should say to the President or to a Senator that Colombia is in such a state of moral and governmental derangement and vacillation that it would be unsafe to contract with it in so great a matter as the expenditure of $180,000,000 or $200,000,000 on so delicate a work as constructing and maintaining a canal there, Señor Reyes would be greatly amiss in attributing such advice to a motive of hostility to his Government.

Or, if he should read the scarcely concealed threats in a leading American journal, which I have above quoted, as to the use of violence toward Colombia, if need be, to get possession and control of the canal belt at Panama, he might desist from personal disparagement and threats toward a Senator who has firmly, in the open Senate, advocated the duty of keeping faith with any government, no matter how contemptible it may be.

I do not hesitate to say that I will oppose the making of a treaty with any parliamentary government that is so crippled in its autonomy that it has no Congress, and is under a military dictatorship, with a large body of its people disputing its authority, or yielding to it under compulsion; yet if such a treaty is entered into I will always contend for its honorable execution, and will never assist in making it an entering wedge for advantages or for the demand of rights or powers that are not included in it. I have said as much in the open Senate, but that does not shelter me from gross villification on the part of the "minister from Colombia to Mexico."

Accepting this ex cathedra utterance of Señor Reyes as the voice of Colombia, I can hear nothing in it that encourages the hope of satisfactory relations with Colombia as to the proposed canal enterprise.

Señor Reyes being an experienced diplomat and accredited to a great Republic, must know that his confidential advice to his President in the negotiation of a treaty, or as to its ratification, is sacred, and that its sanctity is all that makes it sincere or without embarrassment or constraint.

He knows our Constitution and the guards it throws around such diplomatic intercourse, and that a nation is dishonored by its minister to a foreign court who, without instructions, intrudes his inquiries into the secret counsels that are necessary and are required in such intercourse and exposes what he may be able to purloin as a voluntary spy on other countries. If what he states as to advice I have given or statements I have made in the Senate on the 12th of February, 1902, is true, he has violated an honorable diplomatic obligation in having obtained the information surreptitiously through persons who have abused their privileges in obtaining it. Yet he has hastened to publish this accusation in a newspaper in Washington as a telegraphic dispatch to me, which he never sent me.

I do not complain that he did not do me the justice to give me an opportunity to reply to his statement, for he had no right even to inquire of me as to any matter that occurred in the executive sessions of the Senate, and he was fully aware of that fact. He also knew that I would have been derelict and in contempt of the Senate if I had made any response to such an inquiry except to say that it was an impertinence.

On the 11th February, 1902, I made some remarks in the open Senate on the admission of three Territories into the Union as States.

In reply to objections that these Territories were tainted with a Mormon population, I called attention to islands with which we had treaties that were alleged to have cannibals in their citizenship, and were otherwise degraded, and to our duty in faithfully observing these treaties, but I deprecated such agreements with people who are unworthy to be parties to such engagements. In this connection I cited a state of public morality in Colombia, as is shown by its agreement in 1888 to a concordat with Pope Leo XIII, which I set out in full in my remarks, and the law of 1888 enacted by Colombia, and now in force, in pursuance of that concordat. That law is as follows (RECORD, p. 2177):

[Inclosure 2 in No. 95—Translation—Extract from law 30, of 1888.]

ART. 34. A marriage contracted in conformity with the rights of the Catholic religion annuls ipso jure a purely civil marriage previously entered into with another person.

ART. 35. For purely civil effects the law recognizes the legitimacy of the children conceived previously to the annulment of the civil marriage, in accordance with the provisions of the last preceding article.

ART. 36. The man who, after having contracted a civil marriage, afterwards marries another woman according to the rites of the Catholic Church, is required to provide subsistence to the woman and his children by her until she marries canonically.

I also read the entire concordat, which I append to the remarks I am now making. I will insert those remarks in what I am now saying without detaining the Senate to repeat what they have already heard. I said:

I will read something about religion in another quarter of America. I read from a concordat that is made an organic law:

"ART. 34. A marriage contracted in conformity with the rites of the Catholic religion annuls ipso jure a purely civil marriage previously entered into with another person.

"ART. 35. For purely civil effects the law recognizes the legitimacy of the children conceived previously to the annulment of the civil marriage, in accordance with the provisions of the last preceding article.

"ART. 36. The man who, after having contracted a civil marriage, afterwards marries another woman according to the rites of the Catholic Church is required to provide subsistence to the woman and his children by her until she marries canonically."

If I had found that provision in the constitution of Mexico and had happened to be in the Senate of the United States, I never would have voted for the admission of any part of Mexican territory into this Union subject to that provision.

Let us compare that with the Mormon doctrine. What is it? Here are a man and a woman who have united themselves to each other according to forms of law in the United States, a civil marriage, or who have had the ceremony performed by one of the bishops, we will say, of the Episcopal Church, or of the Methodist Church, or by one of the greatest ministers of the Presbyterian or the Baptist Church, and he read in the service which was performed on that interesting occasion, "whom God hath joined together let no man put asunder," as an admonition drawn from the sacred Scriptures, to stand as a warning to nations and to men that that sacred tie, bound at the altar, was not only respected of all men and of the angels in heaven, but that none of the powers of earth or hell should prevail against it.

There is no relation that belongs to any individual in society, I care not where he may be, that is so delicate, so necessary, so important, and so inviolable as the marriage contract voluntarily entered into by two persons capable of making it. Yet we find this act incorporated into the organic law of a republic, whereby it is stated:

"A marriage contracted in conformity with the rites of the Catholic religion annuls ipso jure a purely civil marriage previously entered into with another person."

They may have been married elsewhere, or in that country by a civil officer, and yet when they approach the country where this law is paramount and is organic, they find that it annuls the marriage because it was not performed by a Catholic priest.

Speaking of a treaty with Colombia that the President had directed the Secretary of State to accept, when Congress should authorize it, which was agreed to by the plenipotentiaries of both Governments, and contained no exemption of the citizens of the United States from this concordat and the laws of Colombia enacted in pursuance thereof when they are constructing or operating the proposed canal, I said:

Let us look over the whole field. Let us do justice to ourselves, our own institutions, and our own history, while we are considering this subject, and let not the Senate of the United States suppose that the people of the United States are going to listen to our clamors about Mormonism in New Mexico and Arizona when we are straining every nerve and using every power that we possess for the purpose of getting a treaty under which our people will be subjected to the horrible condition that is provided for in articles 24, 25, and 26 of the law, enacted in pursuance of the concordat with Pope Leo XIII.

The heart of the war in Colombia has been in those three articles. Take the testimony of Mr. Restrepo, who is known here and who was the agent of the insurrectionary forces in Colombia, and from Madrid published his opinions boldly to the world—to take his testimony, not only was this unholy union between church and state, then incorporated in this act of 1888, forced upon the Colombian people, but that, in the war which since that time has covered many a battlefield with dead Colombians, this concordat has been the cause of it.

Mr. Restrepo asserts that San Clemente, practicing upon the new Panama Canal Company, extracted from them, in April, 1900, a million dollars, which he stuck into his pocket, and now Marroquin, the ptesent President, is going to get another—the man who imprisoned Silva, the minister to this country, when he returned to Colombia recently, because he could not make him obey his will. That is the situation there, and we are treating with him; we are anxiously pursuing a treaty engagement with him.

I say, Mr. President, if we have a mind to halt anywhere we ought to halt right here in our dealing with countries that are thus affected, and see whether or not some mischievous consequences may not arise. But when we have made treaties that are honorable and just and are not affected by such conditions I appeal to the Senate of the United States, and I appeal to the people of the United States, to sustain me in my demand that we shall observe those treaties in good faith. If we admit these States into the Union because we have engaged to do it, and it is a duty we owe to those people and to our own obligations, we will have done no more and no less than our duty.

I cited the statements of Dr. Antonio José Restrepo, which I hold in my hand, in an address to the people of Colombia, in reply to the Colombian legation at Washington. It is dated November 14, 1902, and was printed in Spanish at Madrid.

In my statement of my belief I referred to Mr. Restrepo as having made the statements I alluded to respecting Sanclemente and Marroquin. Those are not the statements to which Señor Reyes referred. They were made on the 11th day of February. But what Dr. Restrepo said is far from being all the evidence that supports my belief as to the despotic and horrible conditions in Government circles in Colombia. It is to us and the world a dark land, hushed into ominous silence, as to what has occurred and is being done there.

The espionage and censorship of the press, the mails, the telegraph, and of all informants is so close that even this Government has great difficulty in conferring with its officials in Colombia. We know less of public affairs in Colombia than we know of the doings of the Government in Turkey or Morocco. A few days since came the report that General Uribe-Uribe, the military leader of the insurrection, had committed suicide. Then comes a hush on all further information as to this event of national importance. No further intelligence seems to have been in reach of the marvelous enterprise of the correspondents of the press. Whether this news antedated the fact, or is a way of accounting for a tragedy that Dr. Restrepo describes as having occurred by murderous violence some months ago, no one in this country seems to know. Dr. Restrepo describes it as having occurred prior to November 11, 1902.

I wish it to be distinctly understood that I assert nothing as being true that comes from any official or nonofficial source in Colombia. In a priest-ridden country like Colombia enough of the terrors of the Spanish Inquisition are still felt to paralyze the tongues of the peasantry, and enough of its dispensations remain to make the privilege of speaking only a license for prevarication.

Whether it is Señor Reyes, or Dr. Restrepo, or Mr. Silva, or Mr. Concha who speaks—it is not for me to distinguish between them, as to their capacity for telling the truth or concealing it, and it is of little consequence to us whether they are all falsifiers or are all concealers of the truth or are all brave and outspoken heralds of the truth. They suffer, equally, at the hands of each other, and they suffer severely.

If they all speak the truth, or if they all disregard it, the fact remains that they are not desirable companions for the United States in the close, joint, interdependent and delicate relations we are condemned to hold with them in the great and risky work of constructing and maintaining an isthmian canal, if that task should ever devolve on us. I am one of 90 Senators who are to decide upon this fateful question, and it is my duty to listen with attentive ears to all that Colombians say of each other, whether it is good or bad, true or false.

We have to weigh the character of those people and of their Government, to ascertain whether it is safe to enter into relations with them that are closer and more involved in every way than we have ever had or will ever have with any other people—at the peril of the peace and security of the United States.

If Señor Reyes is to advise us that Dr. Restrepo is not to be trusted for the truthfulness of a statement that he prints and circulates over his own signature, what will he say for himself when, as "minister from Colombia to Mexico," he accused a Senator of the United States upon an alleged state of facts that he or his agents must have surreptitiously obtained from the secret sessions of the Senate?

If we should, in future, have the honor of the presence of Dr. Restrepo or Señor Reyes as minister of Colombia to the United States to assist as a plenipotentiary in enacting supreme law for the United States, which one of these Colombian notables would we object to as persona non grata, and which of them would we welcome to our hearts as a prieux chevalier, sans peur, et sans reproche? Let Dr. Restrepo tell his own story, and if Señor Reyes can put it down or explain it away let him do so. For one I will listen to both, that I may know the sort of national family that we are about to take into relations with us that are closer than any we will ever hold with any other country.

There are even heiresses with great dowries that a decent man might hesitate to espouse.

This is what Dr. Restrepo says as to the fate of Uribe-Uribe and other victims of the sacerdotal patriots of the Colombian church party. In Dr. Restrepo's book, a copy of which I hold in my hand, translated from the Spanish, he says:

Having gained the Government by the treason of that bigamist—whom they sheltered while he was alive, they undermined the whole republican structure in Colombia, and in all questions of the present time they declare themselves to be the legitimate authority, anointed by God and his vicar, and having built a wall around themselves in their stern, inaccessible despotism, they ruled: No more civil wars in Colombia; there does not exist a right of rebellion; no one is allowed to own arms and ammunition; there are not any more citizens who hold a public office, and such as do not, but excellencies, lordships, titled persons of rank, and individuals who in times of peace, like the sons of Isacar, whom Fray Pedro Simon campares with the Indians of the Conquest, were treated like asses and had to live within certain borders (either exiled or proscribed); "set the people to work" (in all kinds of enterprise, labor, and work, things unknown to nearly all the conservatives, these parasites of the antechamber, eternal suckers of the fiscal), "and make them pay their taxes," as we have paid them during sixteen years of squandering, thereby causing the fortunes of the Regeneradores to swell as if by charm, and inwardly having the satisfaction of feeling humiliated by the miraculous wealth of our lords and masters.

In times of war there is only the legitimate government and the "rebels;" the modern international law, the art of making treaties, of arguing with the blind, wayward brother, or the believer in different ideals, but never a common criminal, is prohibited, and the law of nations in force during the barbarous ages is revived; prisoners are shot, broken down and defenseless as they are; gallows are erected, fortresses and subterranean dungeons are opened to keep in chains and even to poison the best officers, who confidingly surrendered themselves or were caught in the mountains.

I write with horror and a wrath that has been for a long time accumulating, and nearly chokes me. Ever since Marroquin believed to be a victor in Soacha and San Miguel, Amoladero, and Guavio, counting upon the pseudo-liberal press in his service and at his heels, and not counting upon the admirable campaign of Clodomiro Castillo in Magdalena and the imposing one of Herrera in Panama and Pacifico, he has given way to a criminal impetuousness and has shed the blood of captives in streams. The most conspicuous, judging by the fame of the victims, were the noble youth of Bogota, of a Liberal patrician family, Antonio Suarez Lecroix, and his companions, Lezama, Vidal, and many others: later * * * I do not know how many more. I just received a paper from Barranquilla, the Boletin Oficial, núm. 88, the 8th of October of this year, which contains the following statement:

"BOGOTA, 15th of September, 1902.

"Governors of the Departments, Chiefs C. and M. of the Provinces, Chief Commanders of the Army, Commanders of the Divisions, etc.:

"I have the honor of communicating to you that to-day at 6 a. m., in Espinal, the following rebels were dispatched by shooting: Cesáreo Pulido, Gabriel Mª Calderon, Anatol Barrios, Rogelio Chavez, German Martinez, Climaco Pizarro, and Benjamin Mañorca, in execution of the sentence pronounced by the council of war which inflicted this punishment upon them, being found guilty of having betrayed the country and having committed assault together with a gang of criminals.

"Your affectionate friend, "FERNANDEZ."

Fernandez is the real head of the Colombian Government. Marroquin is but a stool pigeon.

Betrayed the country! Assault together with a gang of criminals! There is no name for the infamy of Marroquin! And to crown this satanic work there is circulating in the foreign press a notice that General Uribe-Uribe, who made a treaty or agreement of peace with the Government, and, relying on it, surrendered, with all his companions and arms, was put in prison, judged by the council of war—composed of Marroquin's murderers—and condemned to death as traitor and head of a gang of criminals! How could that infamous hypocrite dare to shed this blood, to bring to a standstill this great heart, which harbored the most excellent republican virtues; the hero of Chancos, the chief of the Legion of Honor; the victor of Cipirra, of Peralonso, and Teran, who in the hundred battles sought the glorious death for liberty?

He died at the hands of lawless and furious highway robbers previously chastised by him, these assassins behind the desk, to whom their country owes nothing but shame! And Herrera—Herrera, the magnanimous and "most expert" hero of Santander and Panama! Will he tolerate the sacrifice of his companion, his friend, the tribune, the publicist, the pride of a race, of a family, of a nation, without resorting to just, although painful, reprisals in the Isthmus, proving to the world the necessity which has been forced upon the Liberal party to exchange the sword for the hatchet and to frighton the official bandits? Oh, Herrera! no! Protect your prisoners, who, being such, are sacred; but strengthen your courage and that of your armies by setting such an improbable example and avenge General Uribe Uribe by humiliating in the end the arrogant enemy and by accomplishing the triumph of the revolution, which may then glory in its martyrs.

Thus Dr. Restrepo, writing in Madrid, tells of the death of Uribe-Uribe after his surrender under enticing terms of capitulation as if he was then dead. The press correspondents later state that he was a suicide.

From both these accounts I suppose that Uribe-Uribe has died, but at whose hands will only be known when the Spanish Inquisition gives up its secrets.

Yet he may not be dead, for our Government has not informed us of so important an event, nor, indeed, of any other facts relating to political or other conditions in Colombia.

It is asserted firmly in the newspapers that Uribe was condemned to death after his surrender. Uribe-Uribe may have fallen a victim to his purpose to have a fair division of the $3,000,000 that it is believed we were required to pay to cause him to surrender.

It is only just to Dr. Restrepo to let him tell in his own words the reasons and motives that have led him to make this public declaration of the crimes of his countrymen. He is defending himself and the Liberal party, of which he was the agent, and his coreligionists against aspersions, and he states his attitude as follows:

A PLEA FOR PEACE.

MADRID, November 14, 1902.

Under this title the Colombian legation at Washington, in charge of Dr. José Vicente Concha, published a pamphlet under date of September last, without imprint, which contained various documents relating to the arrangements for peace which were being carried forward between Señor Concha, representing the Government of Bogota, and the director of war, Gen. Gabriel Vargas Santos, representing the revolutionary Liberal party, from March and April until August of the present year. Among these documents appeared two of my letters, one of which had been cut.

In the considerations which precede these documents they do me the honor to include me among the "various important members of the party in whose name was begun, in October, 1899, that war of rebellion which to-day still devastates the country"—that is, the Liberal party.

However that may be, in these enunciations they have perverted in a malign manner past events, the revolutionary aspirations, and even the motives which have led some of the Liberals (myself, at least) to interfere in these arrangements for peace, which Dr. Concha promoted, with very good intentions doubtless.

However it may be, I repeat, to-day I find myself in this pamphlet in company with these persons, a situation, which under other circumstances would do me honor as regards some of them, but which here, in this work of Dr. Concha's, at the time in which it appears and in the aggressive character which it assumes, insults me like a blow. I find myself obliged to explain to the Liberals why I appear in those papers and in the company of those gentlemen. Moreover, I am under the necessity, according to my own judgment, of responding to many of the pseudo-patriotic considerations contained in this writing of Dr. Concha and in some of the letters which he publishes, and to the very grave judgments here given forth, which are contrary to my own opinions previously published and to the patriotic principle which the revolutionists have maintained with regard to the canal question.

Although withdrawn from active revolutionary service for personal reasons which do not concern others, but which if they decrease my merits do not increase my responsibilities, I can not consent to see justice and truth violated, in opposition to the revolutionary party and in the service of the government of usurpation, blood, and theft over which Señor Don J. Manuel Marroquin presides. Before proceeding I wish to state that I esteem sincere and honorable the motives which induced Dr. Concha to promote the pacific contracts in question, and that in speaking of theft and Panamaism in these pages I refer neither to him nor to his worthy secretary, whom I recognize as incapable of yielding to illegitimate pecuniary considerations in their public acts.

Dr. Restrepo then proceeds to discuss the canal question, which was the immediate cause of the civil war of 1898 to 1902. In Colombia the divorce of church and state had caused many civil wars, which the canal question again fanned into a flame.

Not touching upon his clear statements as to the facts relating to the canal, or his very able arguments on the constitutional questions connected with it, and with the powers of the dictatorship of Sanclemente and of Marroquin in Colombia, which I must for the sake of brevity omit to do, at great disadvantage to Dr. Restrepo, I will present what he and some other persons have to say about Sanclemente and Marroquin, who are eulogized by Señor Reyes with such obsequious eloquence.

Hear his definition of the situation he is trying to reconcile to the demands for honorable conduct by both Governments:

The only two possible ways in which the Americans might injure the sovereignty of Colombia in the Isthmus of Panama (although they have engaged themselves to recognize and to guarantee it, and have to this day loyally recognized and guaranteed it, in accordance with a public treaty more than half a century in force) are the following: One by way of diplomacy, dexterity, and astutenes; the other by brutal force, imperious and conquering, which deprives the one subjected to it of his free choice, and, consequently, of his responsibility, and brands as infamous him who makes use of it without provocation, justice, and excuse.

When it comes to resisting the diplomatic dexterity of the Americans, which has been great, and is going to win its crowning result by obtaining the end desired, we have already seen that the Colombian dexterity—the "diplomacy of regeneration," has been of no avail, and that it even deserves to be reproved by all citizens who are not bound to it by the oath of party and by a slavish obedience, for the inopportune occasion which it, as if on purpose, has chosen to ventilate such a weighty question. Nevertheless, as long as these negotiations are not handled and ratified by the Congress "chosen by the people of Colombia" (the only rescuing plank which Dr. Concha leaves to us when bringing his contemplations to a conclusion, page 17 of his book), American dexterity may meet with obstacles not looked for; not, indeed, the resistance which the multiplied soul of collegiate bodies depending upon the multitude is likely to offer in times of great national conflicts, but that of the small degraded towns. What a choice Señor Marroquin will have, and how he will talk after the last Liberal in arms has been shot at his command so as to give room to his servile followers and cowardly and miserable bailiffs to fill the seats in the legislative bodies; but, in spite of all that, even infernal plotters may deceive themselves.

In his chapter on "the constitutional question" Dr. Restrepo thus touches, as with a pencil of light, the infamous conduct of the new Panama Canal Company, which added to the crimes of the old company and its own false pretenses the more infamous crime of forcing a civil war in Colombia, with no other purpose than to get an extension of its concession from 1904 to 1910, for the purpose of deceiving us as to its value and of deceiving Colombia as to their purpose, not to complete the canal, but to sell it to the United States.

The only use it had for this extension was to deceive the United States as to the value of its privileges in Colombia, in aid of a project to sell them to us, while they made the most solemn engagements with Colombia to complete the canal. Colombia had enormous profits awaiting the completion of the canal, and the New Panama Canal Company, having failed to secure money for that purpose, set about to turn it over to the United States by concealed efforts, which forced Colombia into civil war over the extension of the concession until 1900, on the pretense of good faith toward Colombia. Sanclemente aided in this wicked effort, and the Congress of Colombia having refused to ratify his contract and he having promised to enter into it for $1,000,000, Congress dissolved, after voting San Clemente's office vacant, and Colombia has had no Congress since November, 1898; but it has had a fierce and bloody civil war. This is what Restrepo says of that situation:

Thus, indeed, the meddling of the agents of the company with the negotiations then in progress, the importance which they attributed to themselves, the guardianship which they pretended to exercise over Colombia, and the attention which the American Government paid to them, seeing that they actually dominated the agents of the "Regeneración"—all this is due only to the aforementioned prorogation, the disastrous results of which must needs be prevented in time by demonstrating its absolute unconstitutionality, its inconvenience being obvious to all those who are not blinded by elements confusing sound judgment. Let them who have built upon this prorogation not think that they can escape us by the trickery, little as they probably believe in it themselves, that Congress will mend the unmendable and lead things back to their normal and lawful condition. No, there is a guilt, a grave guilt, in having involved and ensnared themselves in such an unlawful deception in order to shift it later upon other persons.

After the dissolution of Congress in November, 1898, Sanclemente proclaimed the entire Republic as being in a state of siege and assumed dictatorial powers. Sporadic warfare broke out in several departments, but did not assume the form of general insurrection until April 20, 1900.

Sanclemente, after a long debate with his fears, agreed to sign the concession to the canal company, granting an extension from 1904 to 1910, for $1,000,000, which was paid.

Thereupon the Liberal party issued the following manifesto, showing that this concession was the cause of organized civil war.

I will insert that manifesto in my remarks, Mr. President. Senators may feel interested in looking into the exact point presented by it:

THE PANAMA CANAL—MANIFESTO.

Motives that are both legitimate and noble have prompted the Liberal party of Colombia to take up arms in order to insure to the country freedom to establish a régime that will guarantee the progress and very existence of the Republic, which are to-day threatened by institutions not framed nor sanctioned by the people, and by functionaries who have received their authority through absolute disregard of, and violent opposition to, the will and opinion of the majority of citizens.

Both nature and tradition have impelled the patriotic people of Colombia to rebel against a condition of things in which they are prevented, de jure as well as de facto, from exercising their legitimate, natural rights; in which a great party has been deprived of its political freedom, and in which the pacific development of the country has been arrested. It is only after exhausting all peaceable means that war has been resorted to as a last and extreme measure, a dire measure, but one dictated and imposed by necessity.

The men that are to-day struggling to recover their rights constitute the Liberal party, and form the great majority of the Colombian people. Anyone who compares the condition, both civil and political, of our people under the system of government that existed in this country for nearly half a century with the conditions created by the so-called regeneration system will no longer take that attitude of contemptuous commiseration with which our civil wars are often regarded by people who have already attained that liberty and security after which we are still striving, and he will understand the significance of the present revolutionary movement, which already begins to put an end forever—we hope—to the oppressive government imposed on our unfortunate country.

We, the undersigned, have the honor of being the authorized representatives of the Liberal party, and therefore of the Colombian people; and the following statements and declarations being the faithful expression of the country's will, through the government that will soon be the only recognized government of the Republic, should carry the weight that always attaches to the utterances of a whole nation.

The contracts that the government of Dr. Manuel Antonia Sanclemente may make, without being legally authorized, therefore, neither are nor will be recognized by the revolutionary government.

The President of the Republic, Dr. Sanclemente, is not empowered to make contracts involving national interests without the assent of the legislative body appointed by the people. Whatever is done without that assent is therefore void.

We make these statements merely to prevent all negotiations relating to an extension of time in the contract now in force with the Panama Canal Company. We concur in and sanction the statements that on the same subject has made an authorized representative of the revolution, Dr. Alirio Diaz Guerra, and those that will be made by Dr. Antonia José Restrepo, an agent especially appointed to act for the provisional government in this and other important matters.

The relations between the company and the Republic of Colombia are of a purely civil nature, and fall, of course, under the jurisdiction and laws of this country. The present Government is not empowered or authorized by any law whatsoever arbitrarily to alter the terms of the contract now in force.

The Liberal party of Colombia considers it an act of criminal resignation to allow the repudiated Government to endanger the future of the country by an imprudent negotiation; and one of the objects of the war in which that party is now engaged is to prevent, or at least oppose, the further sacrifice of the interests of the Republic.

G. VARGAS SANTOS.
FOCION SOTO.

CUCUTA, April 20, 1900.

Thus it appears the Dr. Restrepo was no common person, who is now seeking notoriety through his writings, but a man of character and ability, accredited by the great Liberal party of Colombia as its agent, sent to all nations for assistance.

By entertaining the propositions of the New Panama Canal Company, which began in October, 1898, to transfer its property to the United States, we became the innocent instrumentality of causing the civil war in Colombia. When it suited us to end it, after the great victory of the Liberal party at Agua Dulce, our fleet and the marines closed the war with a capitulation, which is said to have been entered into, the terms of which are yet unknown to us.

At a proper time I will endeavor to get at the truth of that situation. Now I will return to Dr. Restrepo's account of the conduct of Sanclemente and Marroquin, that Mr. Reyes's categorical demand for the proof may be gratified. If he disputes the statements of his countrymen, which I suppose to be his purpose, I must refer him to Mr. Concha for Dr. Restrepo's standing as a man of good character. In the documents appended to Dr. Restrepo's book I find the following correspondence with Mr. Concha, from which I infer that Mr. Concha has a good opinion of him, as I think all men must have:

124 WEST THIRTY-FOURTH STREET,
New York, April 9, 1902.

DISTINGUISHED DOCTOR AND FRIEND: I have just received a letter from Señor Gen. Gabriel Vargas Santos dated the 11th of March ultimo, in reply to my cablegram of the the 24th of same month, relating to possible arrangements of peace with you, the contents of which cablegram you know, having copied same in my last of the 27th. Gen. Vargas Santos has not even told me whether he will come or not, and has not sent me instructions nor authorizations of any class on the subject in hand.

As you will remember, I stated to you in our interview of Sunday, the 28th, that said Gen. Vargas Santos was the director of war and chief of the liberal party, and that I believe that whatever treaty made by him in regard to peace would be respected in the different liberal camps; that Modesto Garces was the only agent and representative here of the above said director of war, and that I did not have any official capacity to treat in regard to any point touching or concerning the revolution. You manifested to me, among other things, the reasons which you had for trying not to have the name of Señor Garces mixed in these possible negotiations, because it would stain them with unpopularity, at least, before the Government in whose name you would have to act. I wrote General Vargas to that effect in the following mail; but suppose that he, without seeing my letter, had sent his instructions to his confidential man, Señor Garces, and as I believe that it would be ungrateful for you to continue relations with that man, I permit myself to advise you (if in case you receive the powers and authorities which you have solicited of the Bogota Government) that you direct yourself to Gen. Vargas Santos himself, by whom I know you will not be neglected, but cordially received, and who will certainly be arranging his voyage to this city, now that the mild spring season will permit him to reside here.

Always as an individual I am disposed to contribute my favorable opinion to a peaceful understanding, with honor and reciprocal advantages before the Liberal leaders such as Soto, Uribe-Uribe, los Castillos, Ramon Marin, and some others who can appreciate in a small degree the dictates of patriotism before those of grievous vanity and pernicious egotism.

At all events, I thank you most profoundly for the confidence which you have placed in me, in making me your confident propositions of peace, and honored me with the idea, exaggerated it now seems, that I could second them with more effectiveness than my limited means of action allow me in the Liberal party.

I remain, your attentive, faithful servant and friend,

A. J. RESTREPO.

To which Dr. Concha replied as follows:

1701 Q STREET NW.,
Washington, April 15, 1902.

Señon Don ANTONIO JOSÉ RESTREPO,
New York City.

ESTEEMED DOCTOR AND FRIEND: I reply to your attentive letter of the 9th instant, which I received in opportune time. I indeed deplore that you have not received any instructions from Gen. Vargas Santos, and I do not believe that Señor Garces has received them either, as he would have mentioned it to me. Perhaps I will address myself directly to the general, and to that end I beg you, if it will not inconvenience you, to give me his address.

It is important that men of your standing show the road of peace as the only savior of the Republic, and I do not lose hope that we will arrive at that solution by honorable and Christian means.

With best wishes, I am, your attentive servant and friend,

JOSÉ VICENTE CONCHA.

To which Mr. Restrepo replies as follows:

124 WEST THIRTY-FOURTH STREET,
New York, April 17, 1902.

Sr. Doctor JOSÉ VICENTE CONCHA,
Washington, D. C.

ESTEEMED DOCTOR AND FRIEND: I have just received your attentive letter of the 15th instant.

You may direct yourself to Sr. Gen. Gabriel Vargas Santos, at Curacao, West Indies, care of Samuel A. Correa. The steamer of the Venezuela line, which carries correspondence for Curacao, leaves here every Saturday at noon, so that you c a write from Washington on Friday so that your correspondence will be here in the morning.

With best wishes for you, I remain your attentive, faithful servant and friend,

A. J. RESTREPO.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that if I were a Colombian and desired to vindicate this agent of the Liberal party I could scarcely find or hope to find anything more conclusive in its effect than these letters written by Mr. Concha, the minister to the United States.

Mr. Restrepo gives the following quotation from Gen. Pedro Nel Ospira, then the minister of war of Señor Marroquin:

There was scarcely a day in which I did not receive some note or notes from Señor Marroquin asking for favors which both military honor and delicacy forbade me to grant. Now it was a promotion for some lazy fellow with neither merits nor capacity. Now it was to give to another some appointment which would allow him to receive a salary without working or without leaving Bogota. Now it was to wait on a son or son-in-law of some friend of his youth. Now it was to give a military passport to another, or to give to a relative one that would state, contrary to the truth, that he was going to Panama or to the coast on some commission for the Government. Being obliged to refuse the greater part of these demands, which rained down upon me daily by the dozen, this operated in the mind of the one who made them and predisposed him against me. There was aroused within him the desire to get rid of one who would not allow himself to be used in all these private intrigues, in which it was painful to see so concerned, at such critical moments, the very Executive who had initiated his administration by announcing that the Government was not a benevolent institution.

Señor Marroquin's large family has to-day tens, perhaps hundreds, of representatives in the civil and military list.

There are, furthermore, linked with the war and its continuation great and active interests, whose influence (concerning which I might furnish full information if I did not fear to enlarge too much) is felt, more or less disguised, even in the highest ranks of the Government. In no other way can be explained the fact that Señor Marroquin has twice frustrated, as I have said before, the operations which had been planned.

The incident which happened among the banks of this city is already known. Not one of them complied with the decree. One of them, in which, as is known, are influential stockholders (many of them intimate friends of Señor Marroquin), by a process and under circumstances too well known and suggestive, united with the others in a declaration of passive resistance, which was signed by its directors as well as by those of the other banks. And immediately, early in the morning of the following day, an agreement was made with the government of Cundinamarca to sell it foreign notes of exchange. A false report of what had happened was given to the public, and the end of it all was the government, which needed gold and had been buying it through the secretary of the treasury, bought it at a much higher rate from the bank alluded to, which thus realized from one time to another an enormous profit for its stockholders, among whom figure prominently the nearest relatives of Señor Marroquin. (Letter to General Marceliano Vélez, October 3, 1901. Edition of the ex-consul, D. Eduardo Espinosa, New York, 1902.)

General Uribe had stated in a pamphlet entitled "Commentarios" that the $1,000,000 paid to Sanclemente had been "converted into implements of war to annihilate the Liberal party, which had only asked for justice." Dr. Restrepo corrects this statement in a note, as follows:

The General is mistaken in supposing that the said million was converted into sinews of war. The syndicate of circumcised who in Paris manage the finances of Marroquin regardless of law or order expended these moneys and all others that fell into that gaping cavern, without any commensurate good to the army or the treasury. The distinguished banker of Antioquia, Don Antonio José Gutiérrez, it seems, was once appointed to examine by triple entry the accounts of those who had charge of the money; but they withdrew his commission from fear of his honesty and knowledge, or he resigned to preserve his life and tranquillity.

As to the religious features of the war and the programme prescribed for future peace, Dr. Restrepo states as follows:

The great farce, the iniquitous farce, of the religious question came to be, as the Jesuit has noted at the end, the desired pretext for the wars in which the ecclesiastical turbulents were dyeing the country with blood. This iniquity was seen as never before in the tremendous war of 1876–77, in which, disobeying that very archbishop who had adjusted the matter of teaching the catechism in the schools (which was their pretext), they rushed into a horrible massacre in order to grasp the power, calling themselves defenders of the sovereignty of the State—which, upon the triumphing of Núñez, they abolished at a blow.

Following the idea which Dr. Concha has given us in the past, it would have been beautiful to see a war in which the Conservatives might present themselves at the encampments and make known to the amazed nations the admirable programme of government which they were guarding with such modesty and would put into practice when they ascended to power with the traitor:

"Suppression of popular suffrage; suppression of the liberty of the press; suppression of the liberty and security of individuals; institution of verbal mandates, exile, confinement, and shooting of prisoners, and the use of the whip in prisons and in the soldiers' quarters; the law of infallibility of the judicial magistrates, which resulted in their becoming an independent power, and the appointing of all the judges by the traitor or by his creatures in order to obtain favorable decisions in matters of importance to the government and its favorites; the creation of laws of exception, which had never before been seen in this country; the creation of monopolies which affect the industries of the nation and the freedom of commerce; and, finally, the annulling of the fiscal code and the suppression of the court of audit."

Colombian notables may all be bombastic in their expressions of dissent to statements of fact that are established by their countrymen, as Señor Reyas has shown himself to be, but there is a note of deep sincerity in the following utterances of Dr. Restrepo that is not encouraging to those who desire to purchase or to capture canal rights at Panama as the necessities of the case may seem to require.

For one I dread to enter upon the task of cultivating brotherly love or national good will with those who seek causes of offense in the alleged remarks of Senators in an executive session of the Senate. There is a furtiveness in such proceedings on the part of a Colombian minister accredited to Mexico that causes serious distrust. I would prefer to believe in the sincerity of men who, taking their lives in their hands, have fought with honorable valor on many hard contested battlefields; and I think I see in their statements and read in their history a lesson that should inspire caution.

Even at its apparent close in disastrous failure, the cause it represents has been so often sustained by the valor of the Liberal party that I can not believe that in Colombia it will not reappear in other desperate civil wars.

Dr. Restrepo says, speaking of the spirit of those people in the resentment of oppressions and of their devotion to the honor of their country:

If the war was just and necessary then, to-day it is indispensable and sublime. War to the death has been declared; the resistance of desperation has been aroused. So be it! The piratical Bogotá being sunk in the abyss, let Herrera fall upon the line, take Colon, and attack Panama "on equal terms." The noble impartiality of the Americans has been already twice proved, and when they take possession of the Isthmus, with the control of the Pacific, they will find in the land a government of blood, of treason, and of theft, which the followers of Marroquin exploit and Aristides Fernández directs. Already the paper money has lost the value it had acquired.

All that the official whirlpool could swallow up has been swallowed. Those who have been entrapped and conquered do not fight for ideas. One blow more and the abominable temple will come to the ground. Those who have been deceived will return to their guerrilla warfare. Everything of value which might be appropriated by the Government, such as coffee, hides, and gold in the mines, has been defended by the foreign ministers against official rapacity. Listen, ye legionaries of Tumaco, Punta Peña, Penomoné, and Aguadulce! Listen, Padilla, Boyacá, Gaitán, Darién, whose banners are handkerchiefs soaked in tears and in the blood of our loved heroes who will never again see them wave. Collect your forces and revenge with victory the misfortunes of your country.

Everything noble and sacred in Colombia is on your side. Each particle of steel in your swords represents an eternity of griefs suffered, of insults unavenged, which will go down through the ages. What kind of peace is offered you? One can not treat with a Government without honor, which forges telegrams, and fails to recognize the very ones whom it has called to parley. A Government which shoots those whom it has conquered and which is sunk in the mire of discredit and prevarication. Pursue the strife! Aquileo Parra, Santiago Pérez, all our great citizens will admire and praise you to all eternity. What does it matter that others defame you for opposing their sordid interests? I read again and admire the words for which the enemy reproaches you:

"Before we will surrender to the government of Marroquin we will open our arms to the Sultan; not only from the liberal governments which sympathize with us, but from the devil himself we would accept and appreciate the assistance which we need in order that we may wipe from the map of America the shameless master which calls itself the Regeneracion!" * * *

The abhorrence that the Panama Canal Company has excited in the minds of the Liberal party in Colombia, as the real cause of the civil war, is not likely to cease if we use our power to force our way into Colombia through the intrigues and crimes of that company, and we shall become the inheritors of its ill fame and of the resentments it has engendered in Colombia among a great and valiant political party.

Dr. Restrepo gives voice to this feeling in an impassioned utterance that I will quote, which shows that the fraudulent and illegal contract between the New Panama Canal Company and Sanclemente was the issue that dissolved the Congress of Colombia in 1898, after declaring the office of President vacant, and the real inciting cause of the revolt that was fought out with desperate gallantry and great loss of life. He says:

The canal question knocks at the public conscience with a resounding blow. It is the devil's moment. "The calf of gold is already set up!" This people, frugal and high-minded, will not allow themselves to be surprised by the rascals and imbeciles of such a tottering government; and if the revolution should triumph in reality, having already obtained its moral triumph, the fate of this negotiation and all that pertains to the true interests of the nation is assured. The blood already shed and that which will be shed will yet make fruitful the soil of our country, and will blot out, as with red-hot coals, the stain which treason, consented to and rewarded, has cast upon it.

I have not quoted these assertions to explain to Señor Reyes, "the Colombian Minister to Mexico, or to his Government, anything I have said in the Senate.

They owe it to the world, and especially to the United States, to answer Dr. Restrepo on the facts, and not by animadversion or by the fate that Uribe-Uribe is alleged to have met, whether it is by his own hand or that of an assassin.

Our part in this war has been that of a victim of toleration toward those who would profit by deceiving us and will be that of a pacificator who never fails to get the worst by interference in a family quarrel.

Some early day will bring proof of this "strong as proof of Holy Writ."

Scarcely less insulting than this attack of Señor Reyes, to which I am replying, is the open thrust of Minister Concha at our Secretary of State, in an interview in the Novedades, of New York, on his return to Colombia in December last. He had not then been recalled as minister to the United States, and was stated to be going home to fight the treaty. The interview, as published, was as follows:

[From the Spanish paper Las Novedades, No. 1042, New York, December 11, 1902.]

DECLARATIONS OF MINISTER CONCHA.

Dr. José Vicente Concha, Colombian minister in Washington, has made the following statement to the press:

"The Government of the United States proposes that article 23 of the memorandum of April 18 last, which refers to the subject of jurisdiction over the canal, and which was positively accepted by Secretary Hay in his notes of April 23 and July 18 last, be so framed as not to allow Colombia to intervene on any ground in questions affecting the canal. I did not accept this change and nothing else save to insist on what had been solemnly agreed to in the first protocol. Secretary Hay has not replied as yet to my notes in the premises since November 22 and has avoided discussion as to the interpretation of the treaty of 1846, the terms of which are very similar to those now under discussion.

"Wherefore I have not interrupted the negotiations nor done more than to state that I would sign no treaty in which the sovereignty of Colombia over the Isthmus of Panama were not preserved and maintained in full force and effect.

"It is untrue that I have been relieved of the mission intrusted to me. As a fact I insisted on abandoning it as soon as and ever since the American marines landed on the Isthmus. Although my Government would not accept my resignation, I have wished to allow the minister of foreign relations at Bogotá absolute freedom to act as he might think best, and what I am now doing is to improve the leave granted me some time since.

"I have not empowered, nor could I authorize, the present chargé d'affaires to exercise my functions as minister. He may only act as provided by international law or pursuant to the instructions the Government of Colombia may give him hereafter. In the meanwhile, nevertheless, everything connected with the negotiations ought to remain as it is.

"Several times already have I had occasion to state verbally to Secretary Hay that it was useless to sign a treaty containing matters contrary to the Colombian constitution, as the Government of Colombia would not ratify it. If the treaty recently discussed should embrace any of the suggestions of the Secretary of State, the probabilities are that it would not be approved by Columbia."

If we are to acquire canal rights in Panama by treaty, it is not required by any rule of comity, nor is it admissible in accordance with self-respect that we should be be badgered or scouted by a Government that we have had to stand up on its feet and hold up by the strength of our Navy until it could appear before the world as a self-sustaining power among the nations of the world.

Mr. President, I have made as many quotations from Dr. Restrepo as I conceive to be necessary and proper for the support of the assertion, which I made in open session of the Senate upon his authority, that President Sanclemente had first of all made an agreement with the Panama Canal Company for the further extension of its concession before the Congress, and the Congress had rejected it. He then threatened that he would sign it and try to make it effective through his power as President. Thereupon the Congress declared his office vacant and dissolved in 1898; a Congress has never been elected since, and Colombia is entirely without that part of her constitutional autonomy.

I did not say at any time that Sanclemente had received a million dollars as pay for resigning in favor of Marroquin. I said that after he received the million dollars in April, 1900, he retired to his home, and Marroquin, by judgment of the supreme court of Colombia, as Vice-President, was substituted in his place, the court finding that Sanclemente had vacated his office by removing to his country estate without having the express will of Congress; there being no Congress then in session in Colombia that could grant the permission.

After Sanclemente made that contract in April and up to the time that Marroquin was invested with that office in September there was no chance to expend that money in warfare or in any other way. He received it. What he did with it is no business of mine, but it sustains at least circumstantially the accusation made by Restrepo correcting the statement that Uribe had made, that this money went to his private use.

I do not know, Mr. President, I have yet to find out, I think, in the history of the Senate, how far a man, speaking of relations with another government, has the right to refer to accusations brought by the people of that government against its authorities. Is it possible because we may have treaty negotiations with Colombia that we are not authorized to speak of anything that any Colombian says about his Government, its character, or its authority to act, when all admit that it is crippled to the extent that, being a parliamentary government, it has no parliament; that it is a mere dictatorship.

That is all I have attempted to say in open session. What I have done in the secret sessions of the Senate this body all now know—they all understand it.

If there is any man here, either one of the Senators or one of the attendants upon this body entitled to the privilege of being present at our secret conferences, who has made these reports to the newspapers, which have been telegraphed to Mexico and then back in phrases that are entirely beyond the possibility of being replied to with patience—if any person has furnished to the newspaper press of Philadelphia or of Mexico anything that has occurred here in secret session on this subject, it is only the repetition of the crime that has been committed heretofore.

I am sorry to say it is not a very unusual thing, but, Mr. President, I can state it in my place as a Senator that no such accusation can be laid at my door. I stand here to-day with a perfect opportunity of replying to this insolent message of an accredited minister of Colombia to the Government of Mexico in a way that would even satisfy him, I suppose, however tender his conscience may be in respect of the honor of the former President of his Government, but I disdain to do it. No; I do not disdain to do it, Mr. President, but I refrain from doing it in obedience to the rule that requires that I shall not communicate to any man what occurred in the executive sessions of the Senate.

Here we are in this new and strange attitude. I do not ask the Senate to take any action. The case is before it. Senators know what has occurred here, and they may take their own course about it, but I must confess, Mr. President, that if I lived under the Government of Colombia, or if I lived under the Government of San Domingo and was officiating there as a part of that Government in giving advice and consent with its President to a treaty, and was thus assailed in the public press by a part of the Colombian Government claiming to be the minister from Colombia to Mexico, I would expect even that little negro government or the Government of Colombia would have honor enough to stand up and defend its own rights and its own reputation.

I do not feel that Señor Reyes can compromise my character by repeating the falsehoods of his employees in eavesdropping; but to show him, what he well knows, how the character of his Government is assailed by brave Colombians I have presented a few of the facts with which our State archives abound.

I now take the liberty of referring Dr. Reyes to that badge of infamy that Colombia wears with humble obedience, the concordat with Pope Leo XIII:

CONCORDAT BETWEEN COLOMBIA AND POPE LEO XIII.

The concordat between Colombia and Pope Leo XIII, promulgated February 24, 1888, and article 34 of law 30 of 1888 of said Republic of Colombia. January 19, 1903.—Ordered to be printed. Concordat between the Republic of Colombia and Pope Leo XIII.

Mr. Walker to Mr. Bayard.

No. 95.] LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Bogota, March 7, 1888. (Received April 6.)

SIR: As a subject which may be of interest to the State Department and important to some of our citizens coming to this country to reside, I have the honor to inclose herewith a copy, in Spanish, of the "Concordat" recently celebrated between the Holy See of Rome and the Colombian Government, with a careful translation.

In making this translation I regretted that I did not have access to the original Latin text in which it was drawn up and signed, but had to content myself with the Spanish translation, which in some of the articles is vague and ambiguous. The first clause of the seventeenth article is so much so that in my translation I was forced to be paraphrasitic rather than literal.

As a part of the same subject I herewith transmit a copy, with translation, of law 30, passed by the legislative council on the 25th of February last, which virtually annuls all civil marriages celebrated at any time in the past, unless the ceremony was also performed canonically. The annulment of the marriage, however, does not illegitimatize the children of such marriage.

I am, sir, etc.,

JNO. G. WALKER.

[Inclosure 1 in No. 95.—Translation.]

CONCORDAT ENTERED INTO BETWEEN POPE LEO XIII AND THE REPUBLIC OF COLOMBIA.

[Concluded December 31, 1887. Ratified by the legislative council of Colombia February 24, 1888.]

In the name of the most holy and indivisible Trinity, the Supreme Pontiff, Leo XIII, and the most excellent Rafael Nuñez, President of the Republic of Colombia, by their respective representatives, to wit, on the part of His Holiness, the most eminent Monsignore Mariana Rampolla del Tindaro, cardinal presbyter of the most holy Church of St. Cecilia and papal secretary of state; and on the part of the Republic, His Excellency Joaquin Vélez, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary near the Holy See, who, after a mutual exchange of credentials, have concluded the following convention:

ART. 1. The Catholic, Roman, Apostolic is the religion of Colombia, the public authorities of which shall recognize it as an essential element of social order, and they bind themselves to protect it in all its rights and privileges, and to cause it and its ministers to be respected.

ART. 2. The Catholic Church shall be free and independent of the civil authority and shall freely exercise all its spiritual authority and jurisdiction, conforming in its administrative government solely to its own laws.

ART. 3. Canonical legislation shall be free of the civil, and shall form no part of the latter, but will be respected by the latter.

ART. 4. The church, represented by its hierarchical authorities, is recognized by the State as a true and legitimate entity, with capacity to exercise and enjoy all rights pertaining to such.

ART. 5. The church has the right of acquiring, possessing, and administering real and personal property, in accordance to general laws, and its lands and establishments shall be no less inviolable than those of the citizens of the Republic.

ART. 6. Ecclesiastical property may be taxed in the same manner and to the same extent as the property of private individuals, except edifices for public worship, theological seminaries, and the residences of the clergy, which are exempt from all taxation, occupation, or appropriation to other uses.

ART. 7. The secular and regular clergy shall not be required to perform public duties incompatible with their ministry and profession, and at all times shall be exempt from military service.

ART. 8. The Government shall enact such laws as will protect the sacerdotal dignity whenever, for any cause, a minister of the church may figure in criminal trials.

ART. 9. Diocesan bishops and parish priests may claim from the faithful the emoluments and ecclesiastical fees canonically and equitably established, either by the immemorial custom of the diocese or by the rules of religious services; and in order that such acts and obligations may produce civil effects, and that the temporal authority may lend its support, the bishops shall proceed in accord with the Government.

ART. 10. Competent ecclesiastical authority has the right in Colombia to establish religious orders of both sexes, to be governed by suitable constitutions. But in order to secure the enjoyment of the rights of a lawful corporation and the protection of the laws they must present to the civil authorities the canonical authorization issued by their ecclesiastical superior.

ART. 11. The Holy See will lend its support and cooperation to the Government for the establishment in Colombia of religious institutions, giving preference to those for charitable purposes, for missions, for the education of youth, and for general education, and to other works of public utility and beneficence.

ART. 12. Public education and instruction in universities, colleges, schools, and in other centers of instruction shall be organized and directed in conformity with the dogmas and moral teachings of the Catholic Church.

ART. 13. Consequently, in such centers of instruction the respective diocesan bishops, either by themselves or by special delegation, shall exercise the right, in whatever concerns religion and morals, to inspect and revise the text-books in use in the same.

The archbishop of Bogota shall prescribe the text-books relating to religion and morals to be used in the universities; and to insure uniformity of teaching on those subjects said prelate, in connection with other bishops, shall choose the text-books for the other schools of official instruction.

The Government shall see that no lectures are delivered on literary, scientific, or general subjects in any branch of learning that inculcate ideas contrary to Catholic dogmas or calculated to lessen the respect due to the church.

ART. 14. If, in spite of the orders and precautions of the Government, the moral and religious teaching (in universities, colleges, etc.) shall not conform to Catholic doctrines, the respective diocesans may withdraw from the offending professors and masters the privilege of teaching in such branches.

ART. 15. The Holy See has the right to fill vacancies in the archbishoprics and bishoprics, but the Holy Father, as an evidence of special deference and to the end of preserving perfect harmony between the church and the state, agrees that in filling such vacancies the previous consent of the President shall be obtained. To that end, when such vacancies occur, the President may recommend directly to the Holy See such ecclesiastics as in his judgment unite in themselves the gifts and qualifications necessary for the episcopal dignity; and the Holy See, on its part, before making the appointment, shall always communicate the names of the candidates for promotion in order to ascertain whether or not the President considers the candidates civilly or politically disqualified for such positions; vacancies in the bishoprics to be filled as soon as possible, and in no case to remain unfilled for more than six months.

ART. 16. The Holy See may erect new dioceses, or change the limits of those existing, whenever it is thought opportune and useful for the better care of souls, previously consulting the Government and admitting such suggestions as may be reasonable and just.

ART. 17. All persons professing the Catholic religion, desirous of contracting marriage, should have the ceremony performed according to the rites of the church.

The civil effects of marriage, in respect to the persons and property of the contracting parties and their descendants, can only be secured when the marriage is performed in accordance with the prescriptions of the council of Trent. This celebration shall be witnessed by the functionary who may be designated by law for the sole purpose of verifying the entry of the marriage in the civil registry. But in cases of marriage in articulo mortis, when this formality might be difficult of observance, it may be dispensed with and other proof substituted.

It being the business of the contracting parties to secure the intervention of the civil functionary for the registry, the duty of the clergyman is limited to an admonition as to the requirements of the civil law.

ART. 18. In order to give marriages celebrated at whatever period, according to the prescriptions of the Council of Trent, civil effect, suppletory evidence of ecclesiastical origin will be given preference.

ART. 19. Matrimonial causes affecting the married relation, cohabitation, and the validity of espousals pertain exclusively to the ecclesiastical authority, the civil consequences of marriages to the temporal.

ART. 20. The armies of the Republic shall enjoy the indulgence known as castrenses, to be regulated by the Holy Father in a separate act.

ART. 21. Following the divine offices there shall be offered up in all the churches of the Republic the following prayers: Domine salvam fac Rempublicam; Domine salvum fac Præsidem ejus et supremas ejus auctoritates.

ART. 22. The Government of the Republic recognizes in perpetuity as a consolidated debt the value of the redeemed annuities (censos) now in the treasury, and of the estates belonging to the church fraternities, charitable foundations, chapels, establishments for instruction and benevolence erected by the church, which at any time may have been inscribed in the public debt of the nation. This recognized debt is to bear interest without diminution at the annual rate of 4½ per cent, payable every six months.

ART. 23. The income arising from sequestrated benefices and tithings pertaining to charitable institutions, chapels, monasteries, and other separate foundations is recognized and shall be paid to those who have the right to receive them or to their legal representatives. This payment shall be made without diminution, as is provided for in the last preceding article, to commence with year 1888. In case any such bodies have become extinct, the amounts due them by a previous arrangement with the Government shall be applied to pious and charitable objects without in any case contravening the intention of the founders.

ART. 24. In view of the present condition of the national treasury of Colombia and the benefit derived by the church from the observance of this convention, the Holy See makes the following relinquishments:

(a) The value of the principle of the sequestered property belonging to the aforesaid extinct convents and religious bodies of both sexes, not included in the foregoing articles, and which has not in any manner been recognized. (b) Whatever is due to such extinct organizations for rents or interest already accrued, or in whatever manner resulting, from said sequestration previous to the 31st of December, 1887.

ART. 25. In consideration of the foregoing favor the Government of Colombia agrees to secure, in perpetuity, an annual net sum, hereby fixed at 100,000 Colombian dollars, to be increased when the said treasury is in a better condition, said payments to be applied to the uses of the dioceses, chapters, seminaries, missions, and such other civilizing works of the church, and in such manner as may be agreed upon between the high contracting parties.

ART. 26. The surviving members of the extinct religious communities shall continue in the enjoyment, for their maintenance and other necessities, of such revenues as may have belonged to them by virtue of previous laws and decrees.

ART. 27. In like manner shall be paid the rents and incomes set aside by anterior laws and decrees for the support of public worship in churches, chapels, and other religious places not included in article 22. If concerning this point there should be doubt or difficulty, the Government shall communicate with competent ecclesiastical authorities, to the end that a good understanding may be arrived at.

ART. 28. The Government shall return to religious bodies such of their sequestrated property as has no distinct destination; but if the owner does not come forward, or if he fills no ecclesiastical office, it may be sold and the proceeds applied to pious and benevolent objects, according to the most pressing needs of each diocese, the proceeding in such cases to be in accord with the ecclesiastical authorities.

ART. 29. The Holy See, in order to secure public tranquillity, declares, for its part, that persons who purchased ecclesiastical property during the past changes in Colombia, or who have redeemed annuities (censos) in the national treasury, according to the provisions of the civil law at the time in force, shall not be disturbed in any manner by the eclesiastical authorities, a favor extended not only to those who performed the acts, but to those who, in the exercise of whatsoever functions, may have taken part in the same, in such manner that the first purchasers, as well as their legal successors and those who have redeemed annuities (censos), shall enjoy in peace and security such property, its products and emoluments, stipulating, however, that the Republic shall not in future repeat similar acts of seizure.

ART. 30. The Government of the Republic shall arrange with the respective diocesan bishops all that relates to cemeteries, reconciling the exigencies of their civil and sanitary character with the veneration due the sacredness of such places and with ecclesiastical prescriptions. In case of misunderstandings on such subjects they will be arranged between the Holy See and the Government.

ART. 31. Agreements between the Holy See and the Government of Colombia for fostering Catholic missions among the barbarous tribes shall not require the after approval of Congress.

ART. 32. The present convention repeals and renders null and void all laws, orders, and decrees, in whatsoever mode or period they were promulgated, in such parts as may contradict or are inconsistent with this convention, which shall remain the permanent law of the State.

ART. 33. The ratification of this convention shall take place within six months from the date of its signature, or sooner, if possible.

In faith whereof the said plenipotentiaries sign and seal this convention.

Done at Rome the 31st day of December, 1887.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, February 16, 1903.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, February 14, 1903, was read and approved.

THE RECORD.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time to call up the matter of the speech of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONRY], which, by unanimous consent of the House, went over from last week until this morning.

The SPEAKER. That is in order. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the speech referred to by him, printed by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONRY], be expunged from the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. CONRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask at this time unanimous consent to make a brief statement in regard to the particular speech to which the gentleman from Indiana has referred.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to make a brief statement in regard to this matter. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONRY. Mr. Speaker, on Saturday, February 7, I handed in to the Clerk a speech, to be printed, as I understood, under the rule that had been adopted by the House granting general leave to print. I subsequently found, when the matter was called to my attention, that the rule which had been adopted by the House granting general leave to print restricted the general leave to speeches pertinent to the bill under consideration at that time. The speech which I had inserted had no reference whatever to the bill which was then under consideration. Inasmuch as it was handed in under a misapprehension of the rule and not having any desire to violate any rule adopted by the House, at this time I ask unanimous consent that leave be granted me to withdraw the speech printed at that time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and consequently the RECORD is changed in accordance with that request.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege. I do not notice that the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] is in his seat, although at half past 9 this morning I sent a telegram to his Washington address asking him to be here at the opening of the session to-day. There is a matter, however, that appears in the RECORD, to which my attention was first called on Saturday afternoon, and I first saw the RECORD after adjournment. The nature of it is such that I feel I ought to call the attention of the House to it at the earliest moment, at least, that it reaches my attention. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] on Friday made a speech in continuation of a reply to a speech made by myself on the Saturday preceding. In opening his speech he said:

Mr. Speaker——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Will the gentleman from Maine yield just for a moment?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Yes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I am informed, after hearing the gentleman's statement, that he notified the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] this morning at half past 9 that he would make some comments on his remarks——

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I simply asked him to be present this morning.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Well, I am informed that the gentleman from New York is in New York, and it is impossible for him to be here this morning. I simply give the gentleman that information.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I think, then, with the consent of the House, I should rather call the matter to the attention of the House in the presence of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER]; that is, when he is here.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. That is the reason I gave the gentleman the information.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I thank the gentleman from Tennessee. That being the case, if the Speaker please, I will let the matter go over until the gentleman from New York is present.

The SPEAKER. With the consent of the House, the matter will go over until called up by the gentleman from Maine. The Chair hears no objection.

BRIDGE AT ST. LOUIS, MO.

Mr. KERN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. KERN. I desire to present a privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER. This being committee suspension day, the Chair has promised to recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WANGER].

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, the gentleman's matter is one of the highest privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman did not so state.

Mr. KERN. It is a privileged resolution, calling on an executive department for information.

The SPEAKER. Let the resolution be reported.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It is a privileged resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas "An act authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Mississippi River to the city of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri, from some suitable point between the north line of St. Clair County, Ill., and the southwest line of said county," passed by this Congress, was approved by the President March 3, 1897; and

Whereas an act amending the said act was passed by the House of Representatives and Senate of the United States and approved by the President of the United States on February 27, 1901; and

Whereas in the said act authority to construct said bridge was granted to a corporation designated the East St. Louis and St. Louis Bridge and Construction Company of the city of East St. Louis, of the county of St. Clair and State of Illinois; and

Whereas the said East St. Louis and St. Louis Bridge and Construction Company of the city of East St. Louis, of the county of St. Clair and State of Illinois, has failed to construct the bridge authorized and provided for in the act and amendatory act hereinabove described, or commenced the construction of the said bridge; and

Whereas it is currently reported that the said East St. Louis and St. Louis Bridge and Construction Company of the city of East St. Louis, of the county of St. Clair and State of Illinois, has transferred the rights and privileges granted to it under the provisions of the act and amendatory act herein described to an interested corporation, thus forming a pool with the said interested and competitive corporation effectually preventing the construction of the bridge provided for in the act and amendatory act herein described: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be instructed to obtain and furnish to this House full information with relation to the existing conditions concerning the progress of the construction of the bridge authorized to be constructed by the act and amendatory act hereinabove described; and be it further

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be especially instructed to ascertain whether the said East St. Louis Bridge and Construction Company of the city of East St. Louis, of the county of St. Clair and State of Illinois, has transferred to some individual or some other corporation the rights and privileges granted to it under the provisions of the act and amendatory act hereinabove described, for the purpose of preventing competition or forming a pool or trust, and to report the information which he may obtain with regard to this alleged transaction to this House in full and in detail.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, this resolution has been before the committee for more than one week, calling for information, and the committee has not reported it, and under the rule it is privileged.

Mr. PAYNE. It seems to me that there is matter in that resolution that is not privileged, and under the rule that would effect the whole resolution. There is an instruction to the Secretary of War to do certain things.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It just calls on the Secretary of War for information concerning the bridge.

The SPEAKER. It does more than that, the Chair will state. It instructs the Secretary of War to make an investigation. That certainly can not be privileged under the rule of the House. The Chair thinks the point of order made by the gentleman from New York is well taken.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, if I may be pardoned a moment—I do not want to take the time of the House—but is not the instruction to the Secretary of War simply to obtain and furnish to the House information in relation to the existing conditions?

Mr. KERN. That certainly is the intention, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. One is to give information and the other instructs him to do certain things. The latter part certainly can not be privileged, and that destroys the privileged character of the whole resolution.

AUTOMATIC COUPLERS, ETC.

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill S. 3560, with the amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to suspend the rules and pass the following bill, which the Clerk will report:

The bill (S. 3560) to amend an act entitled "An act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by compelling common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to equip their cars with automatic couplers and continuous brakes and their locomotives with driving-wheel brakes, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1893, and amended April 1, 1896, was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions and requirements of the act entitled "An act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by compelling common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to equip their cars with automatic couplers and continuous brakes and their locomotives with driving-wheel brakes, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1893, and amended April 1, 1896, shall be held to apply to common carriers by railroads in the Territories and the District of Columbia; and the provisions and requirements hereof and of said acts relating to automatic couplers, grab irons, and the height of drawbars shall be held to apply to all locomotives, tenders, cars, and similar vehicles used on any railroad engaged in interstate commerce, and in the Territories and the District of Columbia, and to all other locomotives, tenders, cars, and similar vehicles used in connection therewith, excepting those trains, cars, and locomotives exempted by the provisions of section 6 of said act of March 2, 1893, as amended by the act of April 1, 1896, or which are used upon street railways.

SEC. 2. That whenever, as provided in said act, any train is operated with power or train brakes, not less than 50 per cent of the cars in such train shall have their brakes used and operated by the engineer of the locomotive drawing such train; and all power-braked cars in such train which are associated together with said 50 per cent shall have their brakes so used and operated; and, to more fully carry into effect the objects of said act, the Interstate Commerce Commission may, from time to time, after full hearing, increase the minimum percentage of cars in any train required to be operated with power or train brakes which must have their brakes used and operated as aforesaid; and failure to comply with any such requirement of the said Interstate Commerce Commission shall be subject to the like penalty as failure to comply with any requirement of this section.

SEC. 3. That the provisions of section 1 of this act shall not take effect until July 1, 1903, and the provisions of section 2 of this act shall not take effect until ninety days after the passage of this act. Nothing in this act shall be held or construed to relieve any common carrier, the Interstate Commerce Commission, or any United States district attorney from any of the provisions, powers, duties, liabilities, or requirements of said act of March 2, 1893, as amended by the act of April 1, 1896; and all of the provisions, powers, duties, requirements, and liabilities of said act of March 2, 1893, as amended by the act of April 1, 1896, shall, except as specifically amended by this act, apply to this act.

Mr. WANGER. The Clerk, I think, has read from the print of the bill reported by the committee. Since that time the committee has authorized committee amendments, and those amendments are set out in the typewritten sheet.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the amendments.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Do I understand these are amendments offered by the committee or by the gentleman himself?

Mr. WANGER. By the committee.

The amendments were read, as follows:

On page 2, after the word "ninety-six," in line 12, strike out all of the remainder of section 1 and insert the following: "or which are used upon street railways."

Strike out all of section 2 and insert the following:

"SEC. 2. That whenever, as provided in said act, any train is operated with power or train brakes, not less than 50 per cent of the cars in such train shall have their brakes used and operated by the engineer of the locomotive drawing such train, and all power-braked cars in such train which are associated together with said 50 per cent shall have their brakes so used and operated: Provided, That the Interstate Commerce Commission may, upon application and after full hearing, decrease said minimum percentage as to any common carrier for a stated limited time: And provided, That in no case shall such reduction permit the running of any train with less power or train brakes than are required by section 1 of the act of March 2, 1893; and, to more fully carry into effect the objects of said act, the Interstate Commerce Commission may, from time to time, after full hearing, increase the minimum percentage of cars in any train required to be operated with power or train brakes which must have their brakes used and operated as aforesaid; and failure to comply with any such requirement of the said Interstate Commerce Commission shall be subject to the like penalty as failure to comply with any requirement of this section."

On page 5, in line 14, in section 3, after the word "provisions," strike out the words "of section one;" and in line 15, on page 3, strike out the word "January," and insert the word "September;" and on page 3, strike out all after the word "three," in line 16, and insert the following:

"Nothing in this act shall be held or construed to relieve any common carrier, the Interstate Commerce Commission, or any United States district attorney from any of the provisions, powers, duties, liabilities, or requirements of said act of March 2, 1893, as amended by the act of April 1, 1896; and all of the provisions, powers, duties, requirements, and liabilities of said act of March 2, 1893, as amended by the act of April 1, 1896, shall, except as specifically amended by this act, apply to this act."

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, Mr. Speaker, we would like to have order. We can not hear anything.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order.

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this act is to make more efficient the provisions of the act of March 2, 1893, for the promotion of the safety of employees upon railways. It has been held by some courts that the tender of a locomotive is not a car and is therefore not affected by the provisions of the act. It has also been held that the act only applies to cars in interstate movement, and cars are very frequently, although generally designed for and used in the movement of interstate traffic, yet they are very frequently in use which is not interstate movement that requires the services of operatives upon them. Whenever an action for damages is brought by reason of the death or injury of a railroad employee, of course every defense is made, and although the car may not be equipped as directed by the act of Congress, yet that direction, as it stands, only applies when the car is being used in the movement of interstate commerce; therefore the burden is on the plaintiff in every such action to establish that fact, and is frequently an impossibility, because frequently the injury or death does not happen when the car is so engaged in interstate commerce.

It is therefore of the highest importance to make the act of Congress, as everybody supposed it would be, effective so far as we have the power and authority, for the protection of employees by requiring the equipment referred to in the act on all cars used on railways engaged in interstate commerce. That is the purpose of the first section of the bill. The purpose of the second section is to require a more general and uniform use of air and air brakes, so as to have less need for the operation of hand brakes. The present act, as I recollect it, is that there must be sufficient air-braking apparatus used to enable the engineer to control the train. That, of course, differs, perhaps, in the judgment of every engineer. Therefore it seems appropriate that there should be a certain percentage of the cars of every train required to be operated by air brakes, whether it is actually essential for the proper control of he train or not.

It may be said that the railroad companies have made great progress in equipping their trains with air-braking appliances; but, as explained by Mr. Albert W. Sullivan before our committee, there are many appliances besides those on the cars which are necessary to maintain their efficiency. Every yard where the brakes are to be tested must be supplied with pipes and with air, and of course only in the great centers are those appliances to be found in perfection. Therefore it will be a great step in advance of present conditions to require this use of air-brake appliances; and it must then, of course, be kept in an efficient condition. In order that no hardship, unreasonable hardship, may result to anybody, and that there may be no paralysis of the commerce of the country, the bill provides that the Interstate Commerce Commission upon application may, for a specified limited time, reduce the minimum number of cars specified in the act as essential to be so operated. I do not see why there should be any opposition from any interests to the enactment of the measure, unless it is that the provision requiring the use of air may be regarded as too drastic and as really greater than is necessary for the safety of the employees.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. WANGER. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I see that the gentleman says in the report that 50 per cent of the cars are to have air brakes.

Mr. WANGER. To be used.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes; to be used. What change does that make in the existing law?

Mr. WANGER. The existing law does not designate any percentage; it requires a sufficient number for the engineer to control the train.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. What is the custom?

Mr. WANGER. The custom varies from nothing to 100 per cent in the actual operation of the trains. Where air is used, I see from a hasty glance at the reports from the inspectors, that from five to ninety odd per cent is actually used.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does not the gentleman think in mountainous countries it would require a great many more air brakes?

Mr. WANGER. In mountainous districts it would require considerably more, undoubtedly, than is necessary in level countries. The gentleman whom I have mentioned—Mr. Sullivan, a very intelligent and competent judge of the situation—says that in prairie countries probably 20 per cent would be sufficient; in the country traversed by the Illinois Central, 30 per cent, and in the more mountainous countries a higher percentage.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does the gentleman think that 50 per cent is high enough in mountainous countries?

Mr. WANGER. Fifty per cent might not; but this act provides that nothing in it shall interfere with the requirement of the original act that sufficient shall be used to control the operation of the train.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then this will not change the existing law?

Mr. WANGER. Not in that respect. Now, Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time and I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. RYAN].

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman allow me a question? What does the present law require?

Mr. WANGER. I have just stated that the present law does not designate any percentage. It says sufficient to enable an engineer to control the train. That, of course, differs in different sections of the country.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. This bill says it shall not be less than 50 per cent, and may be more, in the discretion of the engineer.

Mr. WANGER. Yes; it must be sufficient to control the train.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania reserves the balance of his time and yields to the gentleman from New York [Mr. RYAN].

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of this bill as reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce on December 19 last. I also agree to the amendment now proposed to section 3, providing that this act shall not take effect until September 1, 1903. To this there is no objection from the advocates of this legislation. The part that I do object to is the amendment to section 2, submitted to-day, which provides—

That the Interstate Commerce Commission may, upon application and after a full hearing, decrease said minimum percentage as to any common carriers for a stated limited time, and provided that in no case shall such reduction permit the running of any train with less power or train brakes than are required by section 1 of the act of March 2, 1893.

Mr. Speaker this act, known as the safety appliance law, is entitled "An act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by compelling common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to equip their cars with automatic couplers and continuous brakes and their locomotives with driving-wheel brakes, and for other purposes." This law requires that every train shall have a sufficient number of cars equipped with power brakes to enable the engineer to control the train, but it does not require that all cars so equipped shall be operated from the engine.

The object of section 2 of this bill was to provide a minimum percentage of cars equipped with power brakes to be operated by the engineer, and also to provide for such operation of all cars equipped with power brakes that are associated together.

Mr. Speaker, after a full hearing on this bill before a subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, a recommendation was made that the minimum be placed at 75 per cent. The committee, however, reported to the Senate recommending 65 per cent of the cars in all trains be operated with power or train brakes, and the bill passed the Senate unanimously with this provision.

A bill was reported to this House by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, of which I have the honor to be a member, on June 17, 1902, placing the minimum at 65 per cent. Objection was entered against consideration. A further concession was made by the advocates of this legislation, placing the minimum at 50 per cent and requiring that all other cars equipped with power brakes and associated together shall be operated from the engine.

Mr. Speaker, another concession is now demanded, namely, that the Interstate Commerce Commission be given authority, after hearing, to still further reduce the minimum. I do not believe that this is necessary. The Commission has authority now to suspend the operation of the law, under certain conditions, and has exercised this power on three occasions. While I have every confidence in the honesty and the justice with which they have acted in the performance of their duties, no reason has been advanced why this additional authority should be given.

Mr. Speaker, as to the number of cars in the United States provided with air brakes, the report of the Interstate Commerce Commission for the year ending June 30, 1901, shows that 72.58 per cent of all cars are provided with power brakes; it was also shown at the hearings in the Senate that on January 1, 1902, 76½ per cent of all freight cars in the country were equipped with air brakes, and at the present time the percentage is greater, as all new cars are thus provided. This being the case, Mr. Speaker, it would not work any hardship on the railroad companies to comply with this law, and there is no necessity for reducing the minimum below 50 per cent.

In a statement presented to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, February 25, 1902, by Mr. H. R. Fuller, legislative representative of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, the Order of Railway Conductors, the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, and the Order of Railroad Telegraphers the following appears:

(4) While the law requires that each train shall have a sufficient number of cars equipped with power brakes so as to enable the engineer to control its speed, it does not require that the brakes on all cars so equipped shall be operated.

Many arguments can be produced to show why the power brakes on all cars in a train should be operated, but I will only briefly give what I think are the main reasons for so doing:

If only a portion of the equipped cars are operated, trainmen are exposed to great danger arising from the breakage of an air hose or a coupling between the cars so braked, which causes an instantaneous and extremely powerful application of the power brakes, which causes the front cars in the train to quickly slacken speed and stop and the other cars behind them which are not braked to rush forward against them, thus causing a severe shock, which often wrecks the train and jars the trainmen off and injures them, and in some cases they fall under the wheels and are killed. If the brakes on all of the cars were operated this would not be so, for the brakes would be applied equally all over the train, and the cars on the rear end would slacken their speed just as quickly as those on the front end, and thus prevent their running forward against the front cars and producing the shock just described. There is no way for trainmen to escape these injuries, for they are still required by the companies to ride out on the tops of trains, and when one of these shocks comes, it comes to them without warning, for the noise of the running train, together with darkness at night, prevents them from detecting any trouble ahead.

Wrecks caused in this way do not only cause injury to the trainmen on the train which is wrecked, but also on double-tracked roads the opposite track is immediately blocked with wrecked cars, thus endangering not only the lives and limbs of trainmen, but passengers as well who may be on trains approaching on the opposite track which can not be stopped before striking the obstruction. I personally know of several bad wrecks of this character myself.

Another reason is that on some hilly roads trainmen are not allowed by the companies to operate a sufficient number of power brakes to handle trains on grades, although all cars in a train are so equipped, and they are compelled to go upon the tops of cars and set the hand brakes. The men complain of this to the officers, but the result is only an argument between the two sides, the officers claiming that the number of power brakes used were sufficient to hold the train, while the men argue to the contrary. Of course this is a direct violation of the law as it now stands, but it is thought section 2 of this bill will remove any cause for argument whatever on this point.

The recent reports of the Commerce Commission show that the number of injuries received by trainmen by falling from trains is on the increase, and there is no question in my mind but that much of this increase is due to this cause.

The following is a table taken from the Commission's last report, showing the number of men killed and injured by falling from trains since 1897:

Accidents caused by falling from trains and engines.

Year ending June 30—	Total number of employees.
	Killed.	Injured.
1897	408	3,627
1898	473	3,859
1900	529	4,425

In asking for the passage of section 2 we do not ask that all cars shall be equipped with power brakes. We only ask that when they are so equipped they shall be operated; and it can not be successfully argued that this will be burdensome on the roads, nor hamper them in the operation of their business; and it is only in keeping with the spirit of the law at present, for it is reasonable to suppose that Congress intended that all cars so equipped should be operated. This is evidenced by the language of section 3 of the act, which gives the right to any road to refuse to receive from any other road any car which is not equipped with such power brakes after it itself had equipped enough of its own cars so as to comply with the law.

According to the best expert testimony it is more economical to operate all of the power brakes in a train. Even the representatives of the roads themselves admit this.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Will the gentleman permit me an inquiry?

Mr. RYAN. Certainly.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Does the gentleman understand that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WANGER] was or was not authorized by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce?

Mr. RYAN. It was authorized by the committee at its last meeting.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. So I understood. But I understood the gentleman from New York [Mr. RYAN] to state differently—that it was not authorized.

Mr. RYAN. This amendment was agreed to by the committee at the last meeting.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Unanimously agreed to?

Mr. RYAN. No; not unanimously. I did not agree to it for one; the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD] did not agree to it for another.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Did not the gentleman in committee understand that that was acceptable to all parties interested, and was accordingly reported, without any direct vote being called for? No member of the committee present voted against the amendment, because it was reported as satisfactory to all parties.

Mr. RYAN. That statement was made in committee; but I understand it was not borne out by the facts, as is shown by the following telegrams received since adjournment of the committee:

ST. LOUIS, MO., February 10, 1903.

H. R. FULLER,
The Raleigh Hotel, Washington, D. C.:

The Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, representing over 50,000 train and yard men, protests against amendment made to S. 3560, giving the power to the Interstate Commerce Commission to reduce the minimum percentage of air to be used in trains as per requirements of bill. We desire the bill passed without such amendment.

B. H. MORRISSEY,
Grand Master.

ST. LOUIS, MO., February 10, 1903.

H. R. FULLER,
Legislative Representative, Raleigh House, Washington, D. C.:

The amendment to safety-appliance bill offered by House committee authorizing Interstate Commerce Committee to reduce minimum number of air brakes used in trains would certainly meet with the unanimous disapproval of members of this organization, and I hope you will enter an emphatic protest against it.

H. B. PERHAM,
President the Order of Railroad Telegraphers.

But that is neither here nor there; it has no bearing on this proposition.

Mr. DALZELL. Does not the gentleman from New York [Mr. RYAN] think that although this bill may not be in the exact shape he would like, it is desirable to pass it at this time and allow it to go to conference?

Mr. RYAN. There is not any doubt of that, Mr. Speaker; I will reach that point very soon.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask unanimous consent that this House be given an opportunity to vote on the amendment proposed to section 2 of this bill.

Mr. WANGER. I object.

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that my request be submitted.

The SPEAKER. What is the gentleman's request?

Mr. RYAN. That the House be given an opportunity to vote separately on this particular amendment to section 2, granting power to the Interstate Commerce Commission to reduce the minimum after hearing.

The SPEAKER. To that request the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WANGER] has objected.

Mr. RYAN. Then I ask, in this connection, that we add to this amendment the words which I send to the desk, beginning after the letter "three in line five."

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That the Interstate Commerce Commission may, upon application and after full hearing, decrease said minimum percentage as to any common carrier for a stated limited time; And provided, That in no case shall such reduction permit the running of any train with less power or train brakes than are required by section 1 of the act of March 2, 1893, nor release any common carrier from operating the power or train brakes on all cars which are associated together in each train hereinbefore required.

Mr. WANGER. I object.

Mr. RYAN. It is not my desire to place any obstruction in the way of this bill. I wish only to obtain the best bill I can, knowing that the lives and limbs of thousands of railroad employees in the United States depend on it. It seems to me that with over 75 per cent of all freight cars equipped with air brakes it would be easy to operate a minimum of 50 per cent on all trains. I have been informed that the amendment to section 2 does not mean anything, but if that is so, why put it in?

The safety-appliance law has done a great deal of good for railroad men, and to bear out this statement I submit the following extracts from pages 8 and 9 of Bulletin 1 of the Interstate Commerce Commission, covering the period from July 1 to October 1, 1902:

Among the deaths and injuries to employees shown in Table No. 1 (including some which are shown in subclasses in Table No. 4) there are 130 cases that are evidently due to operating trains in which air brakes were used on only a portion of the cars. Of killed there were 4 and of injured 126, nearly all being brakemen. The total number of collisions and derailments classed as due (1) to rupture or failure of air-brake hose (or other defect in air-brake apparatus, causing automatic application of brakes) and (2) to accidental uncoupling of cars, causing automatic application, is 205, causing damage to the extent of $88,612. The 130 casualties occurred partly in these collisions and derailments and partly in similar mishaps which were not of sufficient importance, as train accidents, to be reported as such.

The element of danger in a train "partially air braked" lies in the fact that a quick stoppage of the cars in the front of the train (by air pressure) for any reason, causes the unbraked cars at the rear to crowd forward against those in front with such force that violent shocks are caused. With all cars equally braked, all will stop in unison, or nearly so.

The above total, 130, includes only those cases which clearly come within this class. There are many other accidents, no doubt, classed as "falling from cars," in which the injuries are partly due to violent movements of cars which would not occur if all the cars in the train were under the full control of the engineman by means of his air-brake valve.

Also the following statement, made before the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce:

Mr. MOSELEY. Yes, sir; each railroad makes a report of every accident on its line.

Senator FORAKER. And you mean that that appears from those reports?

Mr. MOSELEY. Yes, sir; I wanted the committee fully to understand what the law of 1893 has really done. At that time the railroads required their men to go in between cars to couple and uncouple. In 1893, of the men who were employed in coupling and uncoupling cars, 310 were killed and 8,753 were injured. But in 1901 there were but 163 killed and 2,370 injured. So that there were 147 fewer men killed and 6,383 fewer men injured in 1901 than in 1893, when the law was passed, and at the same time there were 4,000 more men employed in 1901 than there were in 1893.

Mr. Speaker, while we would like to have a separate vote on the amendment to section 2, and would prefer to have the bill without that amendment, still, because of the necessity of having section 1 enacted into law and on account of the many other good features of this measure, we will vote for it as presented.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to publish with my remarks certain statements and some tables—not very lengthy—to prove the statements that I have made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. RYAN] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD and to insert certain tables.

Mr. SHATTUC. I object.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I hope the gentleman will not object. The request is simply for the privilege of extending remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. RYAN. Well, then, Mr. Speaker, I will read the statements.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It is very unusual to object to such a request.

Mr. WANGER. I hope the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHATTUC] will withdraw the objection.

Mr. SHATTUC. If gentlemen will let me exercise my own judgment, I will withdraw it; but I do not want to be requested in this way.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman withdraw his objection? The Chair did not understand.

Mr. SHATTUC. I do withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio withdraws his objection. The privilege requested by the gentleman from New York is granted.

Mr. RYAN. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WANGER. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, in the first place, I want to make a statement in regard to the parliamentary position of this bill and explain a misunderstanding that has grown up throughout the country among certain parties representing organized labor in regard to the place where this bill has been since its passage in the Senate and the delay that they complain of in regard to its being brought forward in the House. Hundreds of telegrams from various parts of the country, extending from San Francisco to Portland, have come to the Committee on Rules, requesting, suggesting, and demanding that the committee bring this bill before the House. Now, I wish to say that there has never been a proposition before the Committee on Rules relating to this bill. No resolution has ever been there to fix a time for the hearing on this bill.

The Committee on Rules has never had any jurisdiction of this bill. A complete misunderstanding has been disseminated throughout the labor organizations of the country which has led to enormous expense on their part in telegraphing to us in regard to the bill. So much for the misunderstanding that has grown up with regard to that feature of the parliamentary situation of the bill. Now, in the second place, it is a bill that, coming from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, could come up at any time when the committee had seen fit to be ready and a call of the committee made, and I want to be understood as saying that in my judgment they have made haste to decide the great questions that have arisen. There has been no delay on the part of that committee which is inexcusable by any manner of means. That bill could come up at any time on a call of committees, and is here now upon the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WANGER] to suspend the rules and pass the bill. So much, then, for this misunderstanding.

Now, many of the labor organizations of trainmen have opposed and do oppose the amendment to which the gentleman from New York [Mr. RYAN] has spoken. I have been in very close communication with the opposition, which, I think myself, has not been always quite fully intelligent in regard to the amendment itself, about which they complain; but that is not important. They are honest and earnest. I had a conference with a representative of these bodies on Saturday evening, and while he thoroughly opposed, as strongly as does the gentleman from New York, the amendment referred to, he suggested to me what I think was a very sensible proposition—that unless the amendment could have a separate vote in the House, which I told him it certainly could not, that then in his opinion the bill better be passed as it is, as it comes from the committee, as it is recommended by the committee, with the hope, however feeble it may be or however strong it may be, that something better may be given in the committee of conference between the two Houses.

That is all I desire to say, Mr. Speaker. I have intended, first, to place the Committee on Rules in its proper position in relation to this bill, and, secondly, to point out that the bill is a ordinary bill which does not require, under existing circumstances, any rule of the committee, and, thirdly, that the men who have more closely applied themselves to my education upon this point prefer the bill would pass as it is than that it should be defeated.

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Speaker, I would ask the gentleman from New York to consume more of his time.

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Speaker, I have no request for any further time from any gentleman on this side.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has six minutes remaining.

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to my colleague, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL].

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I had intended to make some observations respecting this bill from the standpoint of a member of the Committee on Rules, but the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] has so thoroughly explained the situation that I do not think it is necessary for me to say any more. Never since I have had anything to do with public affairs have I been so beset with telegrams and letters and resolutions from all parts of the country, all of them showing that there was a misapprehension as to the parliamentary status of this bill. Of course there never was any necessity for action on the part of the Committee on Rules. The Committee on Rules was never called upon or requested to take any action with respect to the bill. It is here now in its regular order, and the House has an opportunity to pass upon it. Although the bill may not contain all of the features that some gentlemen desire and may contain some features that some gentlemen do not desire, still it is in a situation where it can finally be passed upon, if passed by the House, by the committee of conference. That is all I care to say about the matter.

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say one word more. The legislation which was desired by the gentleman to whom my friend from New York [Mr. RYAN] and my friend from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] referred, authorized the Interstate Commerce Commission to entirely suspend any provision of this act as to any carrier. The only change we make is to give them authority to reduce the minimum on application, where necessary, for a stated limited time, so that the requirement of using a certain minimum instead of not going into effect at all as to certain railways under our amendment will probably go into effect as to all of them. When entering upon the consideration of this question my first impression was that no legislation could be too drastic in requiring the largest use of air, but a further study of the subject shows what I should have recognized from the start, that while theoretically the use of air through an entire train is the proper thing, yet practically it possibly involves more perils than it avoids.

Every additional car with air appliance weakens the whole. Its effectiveness depends upon its effectiveness throughout the train. The rupture of the hose of a brake in one car destroys the effectiveness of all, and each coupling of air hose adds to the danger, as operatives have to reach under the cars to do the coupling. Another thing to which I wish to direct attention is the fact that as our locomotives are equipped to-day probably comparatively few of them have sufficient air-pumps with which to operate air-brake appliances on every car in a long train, and unless they have then again are greater duties, perils, and dangers thrown upon the trainmen; so that I reiterate that in my judgment the only just criticism which can be offered to this measure is that it is too drastic in its provisions requiring the use of air. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill with the amendments of the committee.

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that, two-thirds voting in favor of the motion, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

NATIONAL-BANK NOTES.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania calls up a privileged report, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules, to whom was referred the resolution of the House No. 387, have considered the same and report the following in lieu thereof:

"Resolved, That House bill 16228, providing for the issue and circulation of national-bank notes, shall have for the remainder of this session the same privilege that the rules give to bills reported by committees under the privilege giving leave to report at any time."

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, this rule has relation to what is known as the Fowler currency bill. The purpose of the rule is not to fix any particular time for the consideration of that bill, but to make it possible for the House to take up the bill at such time as may be the most favorable for its consideration. The purpose is not now to interrupt the proceedings that we have started on to-day. Immediately on the adoption of this rule, or its disposition by the House, as I understand, the Speaker will return to the business of suspensions.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say, on behalf of the minority members of the committee, that we are ready and willing at any time to take up the bill and have it considered, but we desire ample time for the discussion of the bill.

Mr. DALZELL. There is no limitation in this rule.

Mr. TALBERT. I hope there is no disposition on the other side of the House to limit the debate. We are ready and willing to consider it.

Mr. DALZELL. There is no disposition to limit time.

Mr. TALBERT. I have not discussed this with the other members, but I suppose we would be glad now to fix a time. The minority are opposed to the passage of this bill. We have submitted nothing in its place. We just simply have presented our report, which I suppose the members have, and which speaks for itself. We have no bill to present as the minority of the committee, but we are ready and willing to proceed with the consideration of it at any time.

Mr. DALZELL. I think the gentleman misunderstood me perhaps. It is not the purpose of this rule to fix any time. The purpose of the rule is to put the bill where, when the opportunity is offered, it can be taken up.

Mr. TALBERT. And when it is presented, then arrangements will be made for time.

Mr. DALZELL. It does not interfere with the appropriation bills, conference reports, or special orders.

Mr. HEPBURN. I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.

Mr. HEPBURN. If this rule is adopted, is it not true that all other business except privileged business can be displaced by this bill, that this will be the special order in the absence of others?

Mr. DALZELL. It can be called up at any time.

Mr. HEPBURN. And that no other business can be transacted except by unanimous consent?

Mr. DALZELL. Oh, yes; the question of consideration could be raised.

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes, I know; but this will have the right of way.

Mr. DALZELL. It is just like any other bill. It is in the power of the House.

Mr. HEPBURN. In other words, it will be a buffer. Everything else will have to run up against it.

Mr. DALZELL. Well, I will say to the gentleman that my information is that this bill is not going to take any particular length of time in its disposition.

Mr. HEPBURN. No; we have only two weeks left. [Laughter.]

Mr. TALBERT. I ask that the resolution be read again.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resolution will be again reported by the Clerk.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. TALBERT. I should like to ask the gentleman if he could not, if he saw proper, bring in another rule, limiting debate and not allowing time for debate? I want to get a promise from the gentleman.

Mr. DALZELL. I know of no such purpose. Does the gentleman from Tennessee desire to be heard?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I only want to yield a few minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT].

Mr. DALZELL. I reserve the balance of my time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. All right, then I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. DALZELL. I will yield to the gentleman from Georgia. How much time does he desire?

Mr. BARTLETT. Five minutes.

Mr. DALZELL. I yield five mintes to the gentleman.

Mr. BARTLETT. I appreciate the courtesy of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, it is not my purpose to oppose the rule obstinately. If the majority, having the power, as they have, desire to have this bill discussed and voted upon, so far as I am individually concerned, I am content with it. I shall not vote for the rule. Very few seem to know what is the best thing to do with reference to the amending of the laws on the subject of the national-bank currency. Bankers differ among themselves what should be done. A very wise saying of the late Speaker, Thomas B. Reed, was, "When you do not know what to do, do not do it." I commend the wisdom of this saying to the majority for their consideration.

I do not believe that this is a good bill to pass, nor do I believe it is in the interest of the expansion, the proper expansion, of the currency of the country, nor does it answer the demands of the business people of the country, nor does it benefit the great masses of the people. Whatever I may have to say upon that subject I reserve to a later opportunity. I desire simply at present to correct a most erroneous impression that has recently appeared in the press with reference to this bill and the position of the minority members of the Committee on Banking and Currency. Speaking for myself, Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this bill. I have not signed nor do I intend to sign any report which favors any pending legislation now before the House or before the Committee on Banking and Currency with reference to the expansion of the national-bank currency. I mean by that (and my position is well understood) that I favor neither the Fowler bill, the Padgett bill, the Lewis bill, nor the Pugsley bill.

Now, the suggestion has been made in the press that the minority members of the committee suggested or recommend either one of these measures as the views of the minority, to be submitted by the minority members as a substitute for the Fowler bill. That, so far as I am concerned, is entirely erroneous. The minority members of the Committee on Banking and Currency have not recommended any bill or substitute for the Fowler bill. Neither of the bills other than the Fowler bill has been acted on by the committee, nor have the minority members been called on to consider any other bill or measure relating to the national-bank currency. Speaking for myself, I desire to say I shall not support either of these bills. I belong to that school of Democrats that would, if it were in its power, absolutely repeal the law which authorizes national banks as banks of issue. I belong to that school of Democrats that believe that the Federal Government should coin the money of the Government and should also issue the currency, to be redeemed by the Government in coin of the Government without loss to the people.

Therefore I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania for giving me an opportunity to say what I have—that I am opposed to this bill and all bills of this character. It probably may not be voted on at this session of Congress. We are nearing the end of the session, and we may get it up one day and not proceed with it the next day. My judgment is there will be no vote upon it before this Congress adjourns. I believe, Mr. Speaker, if Congress would devote its time rather to pass laws in favor of the people than to aid by this sort of legislation the stock gamblers in Wall street, that the country and the people would be better off now. [Applause.]

Mr. TALBERT. Will the gentleman yield to me for a few minutes?

Mr. DALZELL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, there are many people in the United States that believe some currency legislation ought to be enacted. I do not believe that there are any considerable number of people who are agreed as to just what it ought to be. I doubt if it is practicable during the closing hours of this session to intelligently consider and enact currency legislation. The naval bill has not yet been considered, nor the fortification bill, nor has the general deficiency bill been reported. Many important measures other than supply bills are pending, and but few of the supply bills have been enacted. Many of them are liable to lead perhaps to the consumption of more time in the House on the Senate amendments than they required in their passage in the first instance.

The time devoted to the business which must pass is less than sufficient to properly consider it. And I may go further and say to safely consider the matters that are to be before the House on the one hand and the Senate upon the other. I desire to say further that, as a matter of individual opinion, I do not believe it is either practical or safe to enact currency legislation in the closing hours of this session. Yet, out of deference to people who have decided convictions as to the desirability of legislation, and from a willingness touching matters of great importance that run to all the people, I do not desire by my vote to assist in denying recognition for consideration of this or any other matter of real importance. I say again that there is not sufficient time to properly consider this bill during the remainder of this session. So far as this bill is concerned, it does not meet with my approval or judgment. It is proper for me to say that; but while I do say that, I am not willing by my vote to be put in the position of saying that if I had the power I would deny consideration to a question of its importance. Therefore I shall vote for the rule, and trust, if the bill does pass, it will be fully and fairly considered and very greatly amended.

Mr. TALBERT. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to yield me three minutes.

Mr. DALZELL. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I want to repeat what I said a moment ago; that the report of the minority members of the committee speaks for itself. They are opposed to the Fowler bill. They so state, and they give their reasons, and gentlemen may read the report and see what they are. If any member of the minority has prepared a bill, it is an individual bill; it has not received the indorsement of the minority, and has never been submitted. I am opposed, like my friend from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT], to this bill, and I indorse his position. At the same time I stand ready and willing to vote for the rule, and to consider any question, because I do not believe in standing in the way of considering anything. My idea of legislation is, let it be presented, let it be considered with full time for discussion, and then let the majority decide and take the consequences. I am opposed to this bill, shall do all I can against it, and leave the matter with the majority. And I will vote for this rule if it can be amended so as to state the time for discussion, so that the previous question can not be ordered and shut off debate.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield to me for three minutes?

Mr. DALZELL. I have agreed to yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], and I hope then that we can have a vote. This is suspension day, and a great many gentlemen are waiting to have their favored bills disposed of.

Mr. LACEY. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.

Mr. LACEY. I want to ask the gentleman whether consideration of this bill could be questioned on any day?

Mr. DALZELL. Undoubtedly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, if the adoption of this rule committed me in any way to the bill in favor of asset currency, I would vote against the rule and I would make strenuous opposition at this time. In fact, some time ago the committee agreed on a rule that brought this matter to a vote at an early day. I was opposed to that rule, but the amended rule brought in this morning provides for ample debate, and no fixed time for closing debate, and no time to bring a vote on this question. Therefore I do not propose to vote against the rule, not because I am in favor of considering this question, not because I believe that the country is ready to accept any proposition looking toward asset currency, but simply because there are a number of members on the floor of this House that believe in asset currency and want an opportunity to state their position to the country. It is a question on which I believe they ought to have an opportunity, and therefore that far I am willing to go.

I know, as every member of the House knows, that with the ordinary drift of business from now on there will be no opportunity given to have a liberal debate on this bill and bring it to a final vote before the close of the session. Believing that to be the case, I am willing to accept the rule and give the gentlemen who favor the proposition an opportunity to state their views on the floor of this House. Otherwise I would not be in favor of it.

Now, I do not believe that the Democratic party—there may be a few members of the minority on the committee who favor asset currency and have their bill—but I do not believe that they voice the judgment or opinion of this side of the House. I do not believe that they voice the opinion or the judgment or the views of the Democratic party throughout the country. From the beginning of the century the Democratic party has been opposed to bank money. They are opposed to banks of issue to-day, and I believe they are opposed to it in the shape of asset currency as well as they were to the original national-bank currency.

Mr. GILBERT. Will the gentleman from Alabama yield for a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. GILBERT. Will the adoption of this rule facilitate the passage of the bill?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If it were possible at this time to bring it to a vote, the adoption of my rule, of course, would facilitate it to that extent.

Mr. GILBERT. Does not the gentleman think that we who antagonize the bill, to be consistent, should antagonize the rule also?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think so. I have no word to say to gentlemen as to voting in favor of the rule. I do not make any strenuous opposition against it, although I should not vote for the bill. I believe there are men on that side of the House as well as on this side of the House who desire to bring the question before the country by a statement of their views. I have no desire to cut them off. But if I did believe the adoption of this rule meant that it would bring the House to a vote on the question; if it meant that it might bring a likelihood of the passage of the bill, then I would be in favor of a strenuous opposition to the rule at this time. I now yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON].

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to yield me two minutes.

Mr. DALZELL. I will yield, and then I shall call for a vote.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I simply want in that two minutes to state that I am opposed to the proposition of asset currency as embodied in the Fowler bill, and the same proposition in the Padgett bill. The latter, as I understand, has no indorsement of the minority members of the appropriate committee.

Mr. BARTLETT. It has never been submitted to them.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. And it has never been submitted to them, as the gentleman from Georgia says. I shall content myself in voting against the rule, not desiring to ask for or caring whether there is any roll call upon it. The rule is presented not for the purpose of facilitating any legislation in regard to these propositions, as has been generally stated around on the floor, because this bill, it is clearly understood, will not reach the stage of passage in this Congress. Treating this as a buffer against other threatened legislation, I will not ask for a roll call, but I want at this time to enter my vote against the general proposition, against the proposition of asset currency; and as it now indirectly arises on the rule proposed, I hope the members on this side will, in their capacity as Representatives and members of the Democratic party, feel free to do so.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken; and the Chair stated that he was in doubt.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 94, noes 76.

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I stated that I was in favor of the consideration of this measure; but I want to ask whether it would be in order to amend this resolution so as to fix a time limit for the debate. If that can be done, I am in favor of it.

The SPEAKER. That can not be done under the present circumstances.

Mr. TALBERT. I am opposed to the proposition unless that condition can be agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The House is now dividing.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 130, nays 95, answered "present" 6, not voting 120; as follows:

RIVERS AND HARBORS.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 17243) which I send to the Clerk's desk, with the committee amendment thereto in the form of a substitute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas moves to suspend the rules and pass with the committee amendment the following bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act to amend "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved June 13, 1902.

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to use and expend the $125,000 appropriated by an act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes,' approved June 13, 1902, for the purpose of improving mouths of Sabine and Neches rivers, Texas, in accordance with House Document No. 299, Fifty-fourth Congress, second session, by connecting the same with Sabine Pass by a channel 8 feet deep through Sabine Lake, in excavating and constructing a channel 8 or more feet deep from the mouths of the Sabine and Neches rivers, at or near the west shore of Sabine Lake, to Taylors Bayou, a navigable stream in the State of Texas."

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. BARTLETT. None has been demanded.

The SPEAKER. A second is not demanded. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill with the substitute recommended by the committee.

The question was taken; and in the opinion of the Chair two-thirds having voted for the motion, the bill as amended was passed.

LIFE-SAVING STATION AT LORAIN.

Mr. SKILES. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 14384) providing for a life-saving station at the mouth of Black River, at or near the city of Lorain, Lorain County, in the State of Ohio, and for life-saving crew, etc., with committee amendments, which I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio moves to suspend the rules and pass with amendments the following bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be established a life-saving station at the mouth of Black River, at or near the city of Lorain, Lorain County, in the State of Ohio, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby required to provide for such establishment and supply the same with the necessary life-saving crew and furnishings, as provided by law.

The following committee amendments were read:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to establish a life-saving station at the mouth of Black River, at or near the city of Lorain, Ohio, at such point as the General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service may recommend."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to establish a life-saving station at the mouth of Black River, at or near the city of Lorain, in the State of Ohio."

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second in order that we may have some explanation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks for a second.

Mr. SKILES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and recognizes the gentleman from Ohio, who has twenty minutes.

Mr. SKILES. Mr. Speaker, this bill provides for establishing a life-saving station at Lorain Harbor. Lorain is located about equal distance between the city of Cleveland and Marble Head, being 30 miles from each of these points. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce have unanimously recommended the passage of the bill, as has the Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service, and also the Secretary of the Treasury. The report of the Superintendent shows that this is a dangerous coast, and there is no protection to life or traffic at this particular place. Just recently there was a disaster there which resulted in destroying a large vessel, and a number of people would have been lost had it not been for the fact that the live-saving crew at Cleveland, a distance of 30 miles, was transported to the point by rail, and in that way the crew was saved.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill with the amendment.

The question was taken; and in the opinion of the Chair two-thirds having voted for the motion, the rules were suspended and the bill as amended was passed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment to the title will be agreed to.

SALE OF CERTAIN LANDS.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Public Lands, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 16069) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell certain lands therein mentioned, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to cause to be sold, under the provisions of section 2455, Revised Statutes, as amended by the act of February 26, 1895, providing for the sale of isolated tracts, in so far as the same shall apply, the south half of the northeast quarter of section 4, township 47 south, of range 29 east, in Lee County, Fla., being 80 acres of land formerly occupied for agency purposes for the Seminole Indians in that State, which land is no longer needed by the United States.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and in the opinion of the Chair two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

GEORGE A. DETCHEMENDY.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Military Affairs I move to suspend the rules and pass, with amendments, the bill (H. R. 13605) for the relief of George A. Detchemendy, which I will send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey moves to suspend the rules and pass with amendments the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States of America is authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint George A. Detchemendy, late a captain in the Twenty-second Infantry, United States Army, a major of infantry, and that the said Major Detchemendy shall be assigned to the first vacancy existing in that arm of the service: Provided, That in the event of existing disability contracted in line of duty the President of the United States of America is authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint George A. Detchemendy a major of infantry and place his name on the retired list of the Army as such major, and the retired list is increased by one for this purpose.

The following committee amendment was read:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That the President is authorized to summon George A. Detchemendy, late captain in the Twenty-second Infantry, United States Army, before a retiring board, to inquire whether at the date of his resignation, accepted to take effect March 10, 1902, he was incapacitated for active service, and whether such incapacity was the result of an incident of service, and whether said resignation should have been accepted as valid; and upon the results of said inquiry the President is authorized to nominate and appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, the said George A. Detchemendy a captain of infantry, and to place him upon the retired list of the Army."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that, two-thirds having voted in favor of the motion, the rules were suspended and the bill as amended was passed.

COLORADO COOPERATIVE COLONY.

Mr. BELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 7288) extending the time for making proof and payment for all lands taken under the desert-land laws by the members of the Colorado Cooperative Colony for a further period of three years.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time fixed for making final proof and payment for all lands located by the members of the Colorado Cooperative Colony in an act entitled "An act for the relief of the Colorado Cooperative Colony, to permit second homesteads in certain cases, and for other purposes," approved June 5, 1900, and found at page 267 and the following, volume 31, Revised Statutes of the United States, be, and the same is hereby, extended for a period of three years longer than the period fixed in said act above described, to the same extent as if said first extension had been six instead of three years.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that two-thirds having voted in favor of the motion, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

PATENTS.

Mr. CURRIER. Mr. Speaker, by authority of the Committee on Patents, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 17085) to effectuate the provisions of the additional act of the International Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4887 of the Revised Statutes is amended by changing the word "seven" to "twelve," and by inserting after the word "months" the words "in cases within the provisions of section 4886 of the Revised Statutes, and four months, in cases of designs," and by adding the following words: "An application for patent for an invention or discovery or for a design filed in this country by any person who has previously regularly filed an application for a patent for the same invention, discovery, or design in a foreign country which, by treaty, convention, or law, affords similar privileges to citizens of the United States shall have the same force and effect as the same application would have if filed in this country on the date on which the application for patent for the same invention, discovery, or design was first filed in such foreign country, provided the application in this country is filed within twelve months in cases within the provision of section 4886 of the Revised Statutes, and within four months in cases of designs, from the earliest date on which any such foreign application was filed. But no patent shall be granted on an application for patent for an invention or discovery or a design which had been patented or described in a printed publication in this or any foreign country more than two years before the date of the actual filing of the application in this country, or which had been in public use or on sale in this country for more than two years prior to such filing;" so that the section so amended shall read:

"SEC. 4887. No person otherwise entitled thereto shall be debarred from receiving a patent for his invention or discovery, nor shall any patent be declared invalid by reason of its having been first patented or caused to be patented by the inventor, or his legal representatives or assigns, in a foreign country, unless the application for said foreign patent was filed more than twelve months, in cases within the provisions of section 4886 of the Revised Statutes, and four months in cases of designs, prior to the filing of the application in this country, in which case no patent shall be granted in this country.

"An application for patent for an invention or discovery or for a design filed in this country by any person who has previously regularly filed an application for a patent for the same invention, discovery, or design in a foreign country which, by treaty, convention, or law, affords similar privileges to citizens of the United States shall have the same force and effect as the same application would have if filed in this country on the date on which the application for patent for the same invention, discovery, or design was first filed in such foreign country, provided the application in this country is filed within twelve months in cases within the provisions of section 4886 of the Revised Statutes, and within four months in cases of designs, from the earliest date on which any such foreign application was filed. But no patent shall be granted on an application for patent for an invention or discovery or a design which had been patented or described in a printed publication in this or any foreign country more than two years before the date of the actual filing of the application in this country, or which had been in public use or on sale in this country for more than two years prior to such filing."

SEC. 2. That section 4892 of the Revised Statutes is amended by inserting after the words "notary public" the words "judge or magistrate having an official seal and authorized to administer oaths," and by adding at the end thereof the words "whose authority shall be proved by certificate of a diplomatic or consular officer of the United States;" so that the section so amended shall read:

"SEC. 4892. The applicant shall make oath that he does verily believe himself to be the original and first inventor or discoverer of the art, machine, manufacture, composition, or improvement for which he solicits a patent; that he does not know and does not believe that the same was ever before known or used; and shall state of what country he is a citizen. Such oath may be made before any person within the United States authorized by law to administer oaths, or, when the applicant resides in a foreign country, before any minister, chargé d'affaires, consul, or commercial agent holding commission under the Government of the United States, or before any notary public, judge, or magistrate having an official seal and authorized to administer oaths in the foreign country in which the applicant may be, whose authority shall be proved by certificate of a diplomatic or consular officer of the United States."

SEC. 3. That section 4896 of the Revised Statutes is amended by adding thereto the following sentence: "The executor or administrator duly authorized under the law of any foreign country to administer upon the estate of the deceased inventor shall, in case the said inventor was not domiciled in the United States at the time of his death, have the right to apply for and obtain the patent. The authority of such foreign executor or administrator shall be proved by certificate of a diplomatic or consular officer of the United States;" so that the section so amended shall read as follows:

"SEC. 4896. When any person, having made any new invention or discovery for which a patent might have been granted, dies before a patent is granted, the right of applying for and obtaining the patent shall devolve on his executor or administrator, in trust for the heirs at law of the deceased, in case he shall have died intestate; or if he shall have left a will disposing of the same, then in trust for his devisees, in as full manner and on the same terms and conditions as the same might have been claimed or enjoyed by him in his lifetime; and when the application is made by such legal representatives, the oath or affirmation required to be made shall be so varied in form that it can be made by them. The executor or administrator duly authorized under the law of any foreign country to administer upon the estate of the deceased inventor shall, in case the said inventor was not domiciled in the United States at the time of his death, have the right to apply for and obtain the patent. The authority of such foreign executor or administrator shall be proved by certificate of a diplomatic or consular officer of the United States."

SEC. 4. That section 4902 is amended by striking out the words "citizen of the United States" in the first line thereof, and substituting the word "person" in place thereof, and by striking out the last clause of said section; so that this section so amended shall read as follows:

"SEC. 4902. Any person who makes any new invention or discovery and desires further time to mature the same may, on payment of the fees required by law, file in the Patent Office a caveat setting forth the design thereof and of its distinguishing characteristics and praying protection of his right until he shall have matured his invention. Such caveat shall be filed in the confidential archives of the office and preserved in secrecy, and shall be operative for the term of one year from the filing thereof; and if application is made within the year by any other person for a patent with which such caveat would in any manner interfere, the Commissioner shall deposit the description, specification, drawings, and model of such application in like manner in the confidential archives of the office and give notice thereof by mail to the person by whom the caveat was filed. If such person desires to avail himself of his caveat he shall file his description, specifications, drawings, and model within three months from the time of placing the notice in the post-office in Washington, with the usual time required for transmitting it to the caveator added thereto, which time shall be indorsed on the notice."

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. A second is demanded by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. CURRIER. I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes for twenty minutes the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. CURRIER] for the bill, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] for twenty minutes, against the bill.

Mr. CURRIER. Mr. Speaker, this bill was drawn by the Commissioner of Patents, and is favored by authorities on patent law throughout the country.

The principal purpose of the bill is to carry into effect an additional act adopted by the International Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property, held at Brussels in December, 1900.

Several of these international conventions have been held for the purpose of bringing about, as far as possible, uniformity in the patent laws of the great commercial nations of the world.

At the recent Brussels convention the following countries were represented: Belgium, Brazil, Denmark, the Dominican Republic, Spain, France, Great Britain, Italy, Japan, Norway, The Netherlands, Portugal, Servia, Sweden, Switzerland, and Tunis.

The additional act there agreed upon simply extends the period of priority in applications for patents from seven months to twelve months. It does not extend by a single instant the life of any patent now in existence, or any patent that may be granted hereafter.

Under existing law an inventor must apply for a patent within seven months of the time he first applies in any other country, and it is proposed by the first section of this bill to extend that period from seven months to twelve months, in accordance with the agreement reached at that international convention.

Nearly all of the nations which were represented there have already passed the necessary legislation to give force to this act. I will read the names of the countries that have already legislated: Belgium, Denmark, France, Great Britain, Italy, Japan, The Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, and Tunis.

It will be noticed that nearly every nation represented at that convention has already enacted the necessary legislation to give this act full force and effect. It seems but fair that this country should take similar action. We have embodied in this bill a reciprocal feature, providing that this extension shall be given only to citizens of countries that give a similar privilege to our citizens. And probably no people will be favored so much by this extension as the people of the United States.

The second section of this bill will permit oaths to be executed in applications for patents in foreign countries, to be filed here, to be taken before judges and magistrates authorized to administer oaths there, and having official seals. Their authority will be proved by a certificate from a foreign representative of this country. At the present time such oaths must be taken before a representative of this country or a notary public, and in many foreign countries notaries public are not authorized by local law to administer oaths at all.

The third section of the bill will permit foreign executors and administrators in making application for patents here in the right of a deceased foreign inventor to make the application without taking out ancillary letters of administration in this country. There seems to be no reason why this change should not be made, as it can harm no one, and it will save foreign executors and administrators the trouble and expense of an absolutely useless formality.

The fourth section of the bill makes a slight change in the caveat law, in order to make that law conform to the law relating to applications for patents. Under the law now any person living anywhere may apply for a patent here, but only a citizen of this country can file a caveat, which is merely a preliminary application for a patent. We do not discriminate against the citizens of foreign countries in regard to making application for patents, and no reason exists for discriminating against them in the matter of filing a preliminary application. No harm can come to anyone from this change, and there are important reasons why the change should be made now.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time and yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY].

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. CURRIER. To the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY].

Mr. TAWNEY. I prefer to wait and see whether there is any opposition to the bill, Mr. Speaker, before occupying the time of the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I reserved the twenty minutes. I understand this bill is unanimously reported by the Committee on Patents.

Mr. CURRIER. It is.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I have no objection. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, there is no question in the world but that the bill ought to pass. It does not cost anything. It does nobody any harm, and it is a sort of condition precedent to certain exhibitors in Europe coming from there with designs to the Word's Fair at St. Louis. It is not possible to do any harm.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I will say that representatives of the French Government have called my attention to the fact that unless they can secure opportunity to file a caveat the inventors of France feel they would not have that protection which they think they ought to have in order to exhibit their inventions at the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, and this provision will enable them to do that.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and in the opinion of the Chair two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

LIGHT-HOUSE DEPOT, BOSTON, MASS.

Mr. NAPHEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 7043) as amended by the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

To establish a light-house depot for the Second light-house district, Boston Harbor, Massachusetts.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to locate and establish a light-house depot for the Second light-house district in Boston Harbor, Massachusetts, at a cost not to exceed $25,000.

SEC. 2. That that part of the act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, approved June 28, 1902, appropriating the sum of $25,000 for the establisment of a light-house depot at Castle Island, Boston Harbor, Massachusetts, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman a question, and I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. NAPHEN. With pleasure.

Mr. CANNON. My recollection about this light-house depot is that the Government has a site there, owns the property, and that the appropriation was made for the improvement of the site last year. Am I correct about that?

Mr. NAPHEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. What is the matter? We have got various sites in Boston Harbor.

Mr. NAPHEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; but we own the site there.

Mr. NAPHEN. Because the United States has other available sites in Boston Harbor where this depot can be located, we object to such an unsightly structure as the erection of a light-house on this island would be. The Secretary of the Treasury has carefully considered the erection of a light-house depot in Boston Harbor and the proposed change of location meets with his approval. The appropriation in the sundry civil bill of last session confined the erection of the station to Castle Island. This bill leaves it entirely in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury to select the site. It calls for no additional money; it simply reappropriates the amount voted for the erection of the depot upon Castle Island.

Mr. Speaker, in the first session of the Fifty-first Congress permission was granted to the city of Boston to improve and beautify Castle Island in connection with its public park on condition that the excavations and fillings met with the approval of the Secretary of War. The plans of the proposed improvements were submitted and approved by the Secretary. The city of Boston in good faith expended between thirty-five and forty thousand dollars in making the island available for park purposes and in the erection of a bridge connecting it with the mainland. It would be an injustice now to deprive us of the use of this island when there are several other available sites within the harbor.

I can say without fear of contradiction that this island is one of the most popular resorts in Boston. It is visited by both rich and poor alike. Its use is not confined to the residents of Boston alone; people from various sections of the State enjoy its beauties. The first intimation that the people of Boston had that it was the intention of the Government to occupy this island for light-house purposes was in September of last year, when the Secretary of War informed the mayor of Boston and myself of the permission granted to the Light-House Establishment to occupy a part of the island.

Protests against its occupation came from the mayor, members of the city government, leading citizens, and myself. As a result, the Secretary of War requested the Secretary of the Treasury to suspend active construction, and nothing further has been done up to the present time. The passage of the bill will preserve the island as a part of the park system of Boston, and, in the language of the Secretary of the Treasury, "will protect the city from an unsightly structure in a very conspicuous place."

Mr. CANNON. I will ask the gentleman to accept an amendment. After the word "Massachusetts," in line 10, insert the words "on land owned by the United States."

Mr. NAPHEN. I have no objection, Mr. Speaker. I offer that as an amendment to the bill.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection, the gentleman's proposed amendment will be submitted, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 10, on page 1, after the word "Massachusetts," insert "on land owned by the United States."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the suggested amendment? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. It will be considered as being voted upon with the bill. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill with the amendment just adopted by the House.

The question was taken; and in the opinion of the Chair two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 7053. An act to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the States.

WILLIAM M'CARTY LITTLE.

Mr. BULL. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 4557) for the relief of William McCarty Little.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

That the President is authorized to appoint Lieut. William McCarty Little, now on the retired list of the Navy, to be a captain on said retired list, with the rank and pay of that grade from the date of appointment under this act.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. BULL. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Rhode Island asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Without losing my right to object, Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman from Rhode Island if this bill has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs?

Mr. BULL. Yes. I was instructed by the committee to ask for its passage.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The committee unanimously instructed the gentleman to call it up?

Mr. BULL. Yes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I have no objection, Mr. Speaker, to a second being considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and a second is ordered; and the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Rhode Island for the bill and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] against the bill.

Mr. BULL. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill to place on the retired list as a captain an officer in the Navy who is now serving on the retired list as a lieutenant.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. How much does it promote him?

Mr. BULL. From a lieutenant to a captain. This officer was retired in 1884 involuntarily on account of impairment of eyesight, but he was not thereby permanently incapacitated for the performance of effective active service, to which he has been detailed since his enforced retirement.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, it is impossible to hear the gentleman from Rhode Island. I insist that we ought to have some reason if we promote a man and put him on the retired list.

Mr. BULL. Perhaps the matter will be better explained if the Clerk will read the first part of the report.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read in the gentleman's time.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4577) for the relief of William McCarty Little, having fully considered the facts involved for the relief asked for in this case, respectfully report thereon, with the recommendation that it pass.

An examination of the facts in this case will show that the relief asked for is fully approved by the Navy Department; that it is an exceptional case, and its passage will not form a precedent for any case known to your committee. It is one in which Congress is asked to right an unintentional wrong in the interest of a most meritorious officer, one who, during the whole period of his retirement, has been in active touch with the service, and, as expressed in the language of Rear-Admiral Taylor, "His exceptional ability, coupled with great industry and love of his profession, has been continuously exerted for the benefit of the Navy during his retirement, and the work he has done has been very apparent and of tangible value."

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Well, Mr. Speaker, if there is any part of that report that gives any reason why this man should be put on the retired list I would like to have that read. So far the Clerk has read a very positive opinion, but no reason has been given.

Mr. BULL. Since this officer was placed on the retired list he has practically done active duty. During the Spanish war he had charge of the Rhode Island Naval Militia organization and was in command of the coast patrol and coast signal service along the New England coast. He has been doing active duty ever since, and is at present at the Naval War College at Newport.

Mr. RIXEY. Does this place him on the active list?

Mr. BULL. No; but he would be very glad indeed to go on the active list.

Mr. RIXEY. What is his age?

Mr. BULL. I can not state exactly, but he entered the Academy in 1863.

Mr. RIXEY. He was placed on the active list during the Spanish war?

Mr. BULL. He did active work, although not technically upon the active list. I have his record here, if the House would like to hear it.

Mr. RIXEY. Suppose you let us have his record.

Mr. BULL. I ask that the Clerk read from page 3 of the report.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I would like to ask the gentleman if this bill has been recommended by the Secretary of the Navy?

Mr. BULL. It has.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I understood the gentleman to say that this officer was desirous of being put on the active list.

Mr. BULL. The bill provides that he shall go on the retired list.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I know; but I understood the gentleman to say that the officer himself was anxious to get on the active list.

Mr. BULL. I think he would be glad to go on the active list, for the reason that he has been performing active duty without the accruing advantages of advancement in rank or the emoluments.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Then, while we need so many officers, why not put him on the active list and let him go to war?

Mr. BULL. We should be glad to do that, but it is not recommended by the Department, and an amendment of that nature would alter the purpose of the pending Senate bill, and might involve failure altogether to pass any bill for Lieutenant Little's relief. His services, however, will be available for active duty in the future as in the past.

The Clerk read as follows:

PROFESSIONAL WORK DONE SINCE RETIREMENT.

1884. Retired May 16, nearly top of list of senior lieutenants after fourteen years in that grade.
1885. Course at war college.
1886. Course at torpedo station; course at war college, voluntary librarian; urged adoption of naval war game, lectured thereon.
1887-88-89. Each year: Attended war college course; lectured on "War game," six lectures; assisted during winter in developing college.
1891-92-93. Serving as acting naval attaché in Spain in connection with Columbian and Madrid expositions and construction of Columbus caravels under direction of Secretary of Navy.
1894-95. Each year: Attended war college course and assisted in development.
1896. Command Rhode Island Naval Militia; war college course.
1897. Command Rhode Island Naval Militia; war college course; torpedo station course.
1898. Command preparation coast patrol and coast signal service. Brought Rhode Island Naval Militia into the naval service for the war and on duty as executive officer of training station.
1899. Executive officer training station. After war, war college course.
1900. Staff naval war college.
1901. Staff naval war college and still so serving.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and in the opinion of the Chair two-thirds having voted for the motion, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE ARKANSAS RIVER, STATE OF ARKANSAS.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 17204) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Arkansas River at or near Moors Rock, in the State of Arkansas.

The Clerk read the bill at length.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and in the opinion of the Chair two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

AMERICAN REGISTER FOR THE STEAMER BEAUMONT.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, by the direction of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 16734) to provide an American register for the steamer Beaumont.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Navigation is hereby authorized and directed to cause the foreign-built steamer Mira, owned by a citizen of the United States, to be registered as a vessel of the United States under the name of Beaumont, whenever it shall be shown to the Commissioner of Navigation that the salvage and the repairs made in a United States shipyard have amounted to three times the price paid for the wreck to her foreign owners, exclusive of salvage.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I demand a second on the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. FORDNEY. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] to control the time in favor of the bill, and the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] to control the time against it.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, I move to suspend the rules and pass bill (H. R. 16734) to provide an American register for the steamer Beaumont.

Mr. Speaker, this bill provides for issuing an American register for an English-built ship wrecked in foreign waters, rescued by an American wrecker, and brought to an American shipyard, where it is now being repaired. It is not new legislation. Many bills of this kind have come before this House within the past few years. Since 1895 there have been 28 just such measures passed by this House, the difference being that in this case there is far more merit than in any of those 28, for the reason that the other vessels had been wrecked by foreign wreckers. In this case an American citizen took his wrecking outfit into the waters of Nova Scotia, paying duty on that outfit. He blasted a channel through solid rock some 400 feet to where this vessel lay high and dry. He dragged it into deep water, brought it into an American port, and it is now being repaired in a shipyard at Philadelphia. This was done after wreckers in Nova Scotia and Canadian wreckers had abandoned the wreck, pronouncing it hopeless. The vessel was a new one, having been floated only some ten months before it was wrecked. The American wrecker, being a man of limited means, got into trouble with the owners, they refusing to pay him, as he said, according to the contract; and the present owner went to his relief and furnished him aid, becoming financially interested in the matter.

The foreign owners were compelled to settle with the wrecker; the present owner paid to that company $50,000 for the wrecked vessel, and he also paid $51,000 wreckage. He is now under contract with Cramp & Sons, of Philadelphia, for the repair of the hull and the foundation and the lining of the engine, repairs to the stearing gear, and other minor repairs. The sum to be paid under that contract, a certified copy of which I have here, is $71,500. I have an affidavit from the present owner that, in addition to the repairs provided in this contract, at least $30,000 more must be spent in repairs to the vessel before she can be ready to do duty again, making more than the amount required by section 4136 of the Revised Statutes. Under that provision the vessel would be admitted to an American register without a special act, except for the fact that she was wrecked in foreign waters. If she had been wrecked in American waters, there would have been no occasion for the present owner coming to Congress and asking special legislation. I repeat that the law would provide an American register for this vessel except for the fact that she was wrecked in foreign waters and less than 150 miles from the home of the gentleman who opposes this measure.

The tendency of legislation of this kind is to stimulate and help boat building. I know of a case in my home, Saginaw, Mich., in which Mr. Arthur Hill, now president of the Saginaw Steamship Company, and his company became interested in the purchase of a boat which had been wrecked under conditions somewhat similar to the one under consideration. That company purchased the wrecked foreign-built ship and rebuilt her in the United States and became thereby interested for the first time in the shipping business, and since then and within the past few years his company has built two 4,000-ton steamships in United States shipyards. And said company has now, as I remember, eight ships engaged in general shipping.

I desire to further call attention to the construction which has been placed upon the statute, section 4136, by the Attorney-General, and especially in the decision of Attorney-General Miller, in which he uses the following language:

The plain intention of section 4136 was to give to wrecked vessels which were practically rebuilt in the United States the same privilege that vessels would have if wholly built within the United States. Its ultimate purpose was to aid American shipbuilding, and it was evidently considered by Congress that the rebuilding of three-fourths of a vessel was to be encouraged as well as the building of a vessel entire.

This is a plain and sensible construction of the law, and the result of such a construction is beneficial to the general shipping interests, and is beneficial to the people who ship goods, beneficial to the whole people. So is this proposed legislation, and it is harmful to no interests.

As bearing upon and showing what has been added to our American merchant marine and shipping under this section of the Statutes, 4136, I desire to state that since 1884 nearly two hundred ships have been admitted to American register. Ten of these came in under the Hawaiian and Porto Rican act.

I have said that 28 ships have been admitted to American register since 1895 under circumstances similar to the facts in this boat Mira, under consideration, none of them having more equities, and in some cases the equity is not nearly so strong. I submit herewith a statement of some of these ships.

Steamer Leelanaw.—Owner, James Jerome. Act February 19, 1898. Same Congress and statutes, page 249.

Steamer Navahoe.—Owner, B. F. Clyde. Act January 31, 1898. Same Congress and statutes, page 240.

It may also be worthy of mention, and I want to state the fact before the House, that no bill permitting an American register or suspending the technicality of the law to permit American registry, even though the boat came to peril in foreign waters just outside of the jurisdiction of the United States, has been permitted to receive favorable consideration since the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] has been a member of the committee. It appeared in a statement and argument before the committee that he is protecting the interests of his constituents, who will have more competition if this boat is admitted to American register. He stands for his constituents, and I do the best I can for mine, and in addition what I contend for will have a tendency to help the shipper by enlarging the field of competition, and outside of the constituents of the gentleman from Maine and some other shipyards no one can possibly be hurt by this legislation. It is conceded on all hands that what is needed is an increase of the merchant marine, and after July 1, 1903, vessels sailing under the American flag only will be permitted to carry goods between the Philippine Islands and United States ports, and so I say admit this ship to American register and help meet these increasing demands.

There are now 178 vessels owned by American citizens but sailing under foreign flags and manned by foreign seamen, with a tonnage of 1,047,000 tons.

In connection with the argument of the gentleman from Maine that the cost of salvage should not be considered as part of the "repairs," and thereby bring this case without the meaning of the statute 4136, and answering the position taken by him before the committee that the cost of salvage is not any part of the "repairs" within the meaning of the statute, I desire to call attention to the decision of Attorney-General Crittenden, made February 14, 1853, in an exactly similar case, as far as repairs, etc., are concerned, which decision established a precedent ever since followed by the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries and the office of the Commissioner of Navigation in the Treasury Department.

OPINION OF ATTORNEY-GENERAL CRITTENDEN, FEBRUARY 14, 1853.

[Pp. 674-675, vol. 5, Opinions of Attorneys-General.]

SIR: The case stated in your letter of the 11th of this month is that a foreign-built vessel was wrecked within the United States and purchased when so wrecked by American citizens for $200; they expended subsequently in the hire of lighters, blocks, tackles, and labor, in getting her afloat and towing her to Norfolk for the purpose of being repaired, the sum of $1,700; the amount of repairs put upon her at Norfolk was $493, making the full cost of the vessel, when repaired, $2,394.04.

The act of Congress approved December 23, 1852 (sec. 4136, Rev. Stat.), authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to issue a register or enrollment for any vessel built in a foreign country whenever such vessel shall be wrecked in the United States and shall be purchased and repaired by a citizen of the United States if it shall be proved to the satisfaction of the Secretary that the repairs put upon such vessel are equal to three-fourths of the cost of the vessel when so repaired.

The question submitted for my opinion is whether the aforesaid sum of $1,700 as aforesaid expended by the American owners after their purchase of the wrecked vessel is to be considered as composing a part of the repairs put upon the vessel so wrecked, purchased, and repaired in deciding upon the claim of the American owners to have a register.

The subjects of the act of Congress above quoted are foreign-built vessels "wrecked" in the United States, "purchased and repaired" by a citizen of the United States, and the cost of repairs put upon such vessel.

The definition of the verb "to repair," as given by standard lexicons, is "to restore to a sound or good state after decay, injury, dilapidation, or partial destruction: to recover."

In the case legislated for the thing injured is a vessel, the injury to it is by being wrecked, that wreck is to be recovered, repaired, restored to a good state after having been wrecked, after having been stranded, or dashed against rocks, or submerged.

The first movement in the repairing of a wrecked vessel would necessarily be to recover her from the submarine or fixed situation, to lift her from the rocks or shoal, to get her afloat or tow her into port where she can safely be overhauled, so that the extent of the injury may be ascertained and amended.

All the costs and charges from the first expenditures to recover a vessel from her wrecked, fixed situation to the last expenditure to put her in proper trim for use in restoring her to usefulness, in earning freight as she was before she was wrecked seem to belong properly to the account of repairs made upon the vessel.

If a house injured by a fire be repaired, would it be proper in computing the cost of repairs to omit expenses of removing from the interior of the burning walls, the smoking ruins, the fallen slates of the roof and the bricks and mortar of the inner, tumbled, crumbled walls, the charges of scaffolds and platforms for the laborers to stand upon while repairing the destruction caused by the fire? That the removal of rubbish and these appliances necessarily used in the reconstruction do not adhere to the building when refitted for habitation would be no reasonable cause for excluding those necessary things from the account when computing the costs of repairing the building.

In my opinion the said sum of $1,700 must be taken into account in solving the question "whether the repairs put upon said vessel shall be equal to three-fourths of the cost of the vessel when so repaired."

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I am very much amused with the geography of my distinguished friend, whatever bearing that may have on this case. The gentleman speaks of this wreck being 100 miles from my home when it was about 100 miles from the eastern limits of the State of Maine, and I am located about 125 miles from that eastern boundary.

Now, I want to say a few words about this bill as it appears before the House, and I would like the attention of gentlemen here. This bill was reported by the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries on Thursday last. It was considered by a subcommittee of which I am the chairman, and on Thursday last the committee, without getting a report from the subcommittee, discharged that subcommittee from its duties, in my absence, and without notice to me.

I was opposed to it. The Committee on Merchant Marine, however, took up the bill and ordered it reported. As soon as I learned that the bill had been ordered reported, which was on Friday morning, I asked unanimous consent to have until Monday morning to file minority views, in order that members of the House might have in print the reasons why the minority thought that this bill should not become a law. Those views were filed here this morning, and they are before me now in manuscript. Of course they have not been printed because there has not been time to print them, so that members can not have the benefit of the minority views except as I am able to state them on this floor.

I have no doubt it is to an extent true that some vessels have been admitted under circumstances that might furnish precedents for this. Just for a moment I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that since 1884 there have been admitted by this special legislation 189 vessels, with a tonnage of 121,055. During the time my predecessor, Governor Dingley, served on this Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, there were admitted to American registry vessels having a tonnage of something like 34,000. I will file with my remarks, because I do not want to take time to read it now, an itemized statement of the vessels thus admitted. There are now carrying the American flag foreign bottoms admitted to American registery by special legislation 127,300 tons.

In the first place, the members of this House must well understand that it costs Americans in American shipyards about 25 per cent more to build their ships than it costs to build them abroad, and every one of these ships admitted, foreign built, to American registry stands her owners from 25 to 50 per cent less as investment than she would if built in an American shipyard, and she competes in our coastwise and foreign trade with American bottoms under those circumstances. I have not been able to learn that until this Congress, the Fifty-seventh, there has been any organized opposition to the general promiscuous admission of foreign-built ships to American registry. During this term of Congress people interested in the American shipyards and building American ships, by reason of this large amount of tonnage which has been dumped in upon them under these circumstances, for the protection of American interests have felt obliged to make a vigorous protest, and a vigorous protest has been made before the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries during this Congress.

No bill has been recommended by that committee that would under any circumstances furnish a precedent for this bill now pending. The committee has reported adversely in several instances and announced this proposition by which it would be governed. In three adverse reports the committee say:

> The committee are of the opinion that the immemorial policy of this country to preserve for American-built vessels its coastwise trade intact, and any other privilege to which they should be specially entitled, should be maintained.

The report further says:

> The general law has for a long time authorized, under specific and well-defined conditions, the granting of American registry to a foreign vessel. We do not believe that any such vessels should be admitted to American registry except in strict accordance with these conditions unless there appears to be some extraordinary and unforeseen circumstance that clearly justified and required departure from this general rule.

Mr. HAMILTON. From what is the gentleman reading?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. From the report of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, made at this Congress. That is the rule laid down by this committee. This case does not come within that rule. This vessel Myra was wrecked at Chebogue Point, Nova Scotia, in the Bay of Fundy, about 100 miles from the eastern point of the State of Maine. She was salved by one James Reid and taken into Halifax Harbor, Nova Scotia. When in that harbor Mr. Gilchrist, a citizen of Michigan, went down and bought her in at public auction. He had nothing to do with saving her. He did not invest anything in so doing, in taking her off the rocks, but simply went down there and on an open speculation invested his money in this ship, buying her at public auction, subject to the salvage charge. He paid $50,000, subject to a salvage charge of $51,000.

Mr. FORDNEY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I have but a few moments.

Mr. FORDNEY. I just wanted to say that he did not buy her at public auction.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Well, then he bought her at private sale.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. He did come to the rescue of a personal friend.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. My minority report, if you had allowed it to have been printed, would have stated that fact.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I had nothing to do with that.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. He went down, and whether he bought at private sale or public auction is immaterial.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. It does make some difference.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. He paid $50,000 for this vessel. He testified before the subcommittee that he was advised to go and make that purchase by one Samuel Holmes, a ship broker in New York, who told me in my room that he had been engaged in getting American registers for foreign-built ships, and urged me to admit this vessel. So that when Mr. Gilchrist went down and invested $101,000 in this foreign-built ship he knew that he was taking the chances of getting her admitted to American registry by special legislation. He gambled upon the prospects of being able to get this bill through the committee and through the House. That was no doubt a legitimate speculation. I make no complaint about Mr. Gilchrist. My objections are general. He is an honorable gentleman and appeared thoroughly well before the committee—entirely straightforward. He stated these facts. He did not put them exactly as I state them, but these are the facts. There is no question about this vessel having been wrecked outside of the United States.

There are only two circumstances under which the Commissioner of Navigation can admit a foreign-built ship to American registry: First, she must be wrecked inside the waters of the United States, and second, her owner must expend three-quarters of her value in an American shipyard or in repairs—the statute does not in terms require the repairs to be made in an American shipyard, though that is a fair inference. This vessel may cost to repair $71,500, and they estimate $30,000 for additional expenses, in all $202,500, made up as follows: $101,000 purchase price and salvage; $71,500 repairs by contract, and $30,000 estimated, and by his own statement Mr. Gilchrist will expend only $101,500 in repairs. In order to come within the condition it would be necessary for him to spend at least $150,000 for repairs, and he falls $50,000 short of that. Now, these are the circumstances and these are the conditions.

How much time have I left, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. Seven minutes.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I have no objection to this case by reason of the fact that Mr. Gilchrist is the purchaser and seeking this register; but I think we are obliged to stand here and maintain this policy of the Government. This vessel when built and repaired by him, as I am reliably informed, while costing him only $201,000, would be worth——

Mr. HAMILTON. When was this policy inaugurated which the gentleman now advocates? You speak of this policy.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The policy so far as this present bill is concerned was inaugurated in this Congress.

Mr. HAMILTON. Just inaugurated?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Just inaugurated in this Congress.

Mr. HAMILTON. It is being inaugurated now by the gentleman, is it not?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Not necessarily; not at all.

Mr. HAMILTON. Is not this the first instance?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. No; it was inaugurated in three instances which have already been reported adversely to this House in the cases of the Antiope, the Melanope, and the Vantromp.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. None of which you favored?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Of course I did not, because I was on the committee that adversely reported each of them. I reported that in the case of the three, and everyone of them was wrecked outside of American waters and had repairs put on them in American shipyards; and the committee made the same report in each instance, which was a unanimous report from this committee at this session. Here is the list I call your attention to, showing the number of tons that have been coming in in years past.

Mr. HAMILTON. You said 28 vessels had been admitted during this Congress?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Oh, no. From 1884 up to 1902 179 vessels have been admitted, and that is the reason why men who have had their money invested in American shipyards, in American ships, have found it necessary to make a vigorous protest, to inquire whether or not the policy of the statute laid down in 1852 is to be maintained by this Congress or whether they are to be subjected to competition by foreign vessels under these circumstances.

Mr. PAYNE. Has not the policy been with reference to these 179 vessels that at least three-quarters of the value must have been put on in repairs?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I imagine that may be correct, because the gentleman from New York was chairman of the committee for a long while, and is therefore able to state the circumstances under which these 179 vessels have heretofore been admitted—that three-quarters of the value must be put on in repairs in American shipyards.

Now, there is no basis upon which that can be so in this case, because in all, including $100,000 in repairs to be put on, the total cost is $200,000.

Now, with these suggestions, Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], and reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DALZELL. Let us hear from the other side.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Very well; then I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. METCALF. In the course of your remarks you said you had not understood that any protest had been made against granting an American register until this session of Congress.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Not until this term.

Mr. METCALF. But that a vigorous protest had been made at this time.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Yes.

Mr. METCALF. Have you any objection to stating by whom the protest was made?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Several large shipyards, the Newport News yard, the New York and New England Company, and a Hawaiian company. There are several large companies that have made protests.

Mr. METCALF. Just one more question.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD (continuing). And it has been made by the largest shipowning concern in my own district, Arthur Sewell & Co.

Mr. METCALF. A shipbuilding company made the protest in this particular case?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. They did.

Mr. METCALF. They put in their bid for repairing this particular ship, did they not?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I don't know how that may be.

Mr. METCALF. Was not that statement made before the subcommittee?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Yes; that statement was made before the subcommittee, but not before the full committee. That is, I don't know what statement was made before the full committee; I was not there.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Is it not a fact that this Newport News company that you speak of had their man there and made a bid on this very work, and because they did not get it they protested most vigorously?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. No; that is not a fact.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Did not that appear before the committee?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. No; it did not appear before the committee. Mr. Gilcrist threw out that insinuation, just exactly as my friend from California [Mr. METCALF] has thrown it out, and just as some other gentlemen may desire to throw it out. It did not appear that Mr. Gilcrist said that. The specifications in this case were submitted to the Newport News shipyard and their bid was not accepted. That is all there is of it.

Mr. FORDNEY. They put in a bid and because their bid was higher than the Cramps it was rejected, and therefore they oppose it.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The gentleman does not, of course, undertake to say that they said that, except by insinuation.

Mr. FORDNEY. He said that they had bid and their bid had been rejected.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. He did not undertake to say that except as an insinuation just as my friend from Michigan is saying by way of insinuation that that is the reason why they opposed the American registry being given to this vessel. If the gentleman will pardon me let me say that Mr. Payson, who represented that shipyard, said that they wanted notice from this committee of every case of application made for giving a foreign-built ship an American register, because he was instructed by his clients to make a vigorous opposition to such legislation. That is what he said.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Does the committee propose to furnish him with that notice?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Yes.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Is he entitled to it?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. He is a citizen, and representing the American merchant marine; I think everyone is entitled to that information when it is proposed by any legislation to indirectly repeal the law on the subject.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. They are not the guardians of our legislation.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. They are not the guardians of our legislation, but as individuals they have got the right to be heard.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman reserves the balance of his time. The gentleman has five minutes remaining.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS].

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, I have served as a member of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries nearly ten years during my service in this House. I was also present at the time when this bill was finally passed upon by the committee, in the absence of the gentleman from Maine. I will state to the members of this House that there was no intended discourtesy to the gentleman from Maine. The committee after full consideration determined the bill to be meritorious, and decided to favorably report it to the House.

The gentleman from Maine has read a statement here showing that it has been the policy of this Government for many years to permit American register under the conditions presented here. He has shown, from the Commissioner of Navigation, that nearly a hundred vessels within the last fifteen years have been admitted under those conditions. So that when the contract was made to take this vessel from the rocks and into port and to an American shipyard and have these repairs made, these precedents were all before these parties. They understood if they complied with the requirements of the statutes of the United States that American registry would be granted to this ship.

Now, we have a general statute that provides that where the expense of the repairs amounts to three-fourths of the value of the ship, the Secretary of the Treasury can grant an American register; and the only technical objection is that this vessel was wrecked in foreign waters, about 100 miles outside the limits of the waters of the United States. The salvage that is paid for it, and the amount of money that is paid for the repairs, in the aggregate amount to three-fourths of the value of the ship. If that be so, I can not see any valid reason why it should be denied an American registry.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Excuse me just a moment. I may be wrong in my calculation. Are you able to figure out anything in excess of $201,000?

Mr. HOPKINS. I am estimating the salvage at $50,000.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. You recognize salvage as a part of the repairs?

Mr. HOPKINS. That is what it cost to get the ship off the rocks and get it to the shipyard. The repairs will aggregate one hundred thousand more, and together they make about three-fourths of the value of the ship.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. You estimate the salvage as a part of the repairs?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes, sir. The gentleman from Maine says the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries have adopted a new rule that excludes this ship from American registry.

That rule, if it has been adopted by that committee, was not in vogue and was not known at the time these expenses were incurred. That rule has not been made familiar to the members in this House or the members of the Senate; and I submit that after these men have gone forward and expended one hundred and fifty-odd thousand dollars to get this vessel off the rocks, and paid American workmen in American shipyards $100,000 and a little over for repairs, that we ought to grant the same privilege that we have been granting in nearly one hundred other cases. I now yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL].

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, from the foundation of the Government down to the present time it has been the American policy to secure and preserve our coastwise trade for vessels built in American shipyards. Down until 1852 it would have been impossible to have taken a wreck within the waters of the United States and have it repaired in an American shipyard and secure an American register. Fifty years ago a concession was made, and it was provided that a vessel wrecked within the waters of the United States might be raised and taken to an American shipyard, and if there were repairs equal to three-fourths of her value put upon her, she might have an American register.

Mr. PAYNE. But salvage was no part of it?

Mr. DALZELL. Not at all. Now, this bill not only asks us to go a step beyond the provisions of section 4163 of the Revised Statutes, the act of 1852, but it asks us to say to the Secretary of the Treasury that if he finds there has been not three-quarters of the value of the vessel put upon her in repairs, but if he finds the repairs and the salvage, with which the American laborer, the American capitalist, or the American shipyard have nothing to do, if he finds that these two items——

Mr. HOPKINS. I want to say to the gentleman that in this instance it was the American laborer that did this.

Mr. DALZELL. Not at all; the vessel was wrecked 150 miles beyond the limits of the United States. Now, I can not yield to the gentleman; I have only a minute. There is no use in disguising the fact; this is a plain, simple case of an attempt to get an American register for a foreign-built vessel in place of investing the money in the product of an American shipyard. I do not care whether the Cramps complain, or whether the Newport News people complain, or who else complains; I am complaining in behalf of my constituents, who, when they want a coastwise vessel, go and buy it in an American shipyard.

I am complaining of the unfair treatment which allows the beneficiary in this case to go to a ship broker in New York and buy a foreign vessel instead of buying a vessel built by American labor, by men who are paid American wages, by men who have invested money and capital in the protection of American labor and in the building up of American industry. It is a question of protection or free trade in the case of this particular vessel sought to be admitted to the coastwise trade. I protest against it—I protest against it as un-Republican in policy, I protest against it as unfair to American labor, and as the inauguration of or continuance of a policy that ought to be abandoned in the interest of home industry. [Applause.]

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a minute and a half.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I rise simply to say and repeat what my colleague from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS], on the committee, has said—that nobody intended any disrespect to the distinguished member of the committee from Maine; but we did think, upon the statement made and urged by the gentleman from Michigan, that this case came well within the rule laid down in the law, with the single exception that the wreck of the ship was in foreign waters instead of American waters. I think the accident occurred about 100 miles distant, and that stood between her and the right to demand under our statute an American register. I have opposed the granting of these registers upon the same ground as does the gentleman from Pennsylvania. This especially long list of ships and vessels admitted to American register is due to change of sovereignty, change of ownership, in the Hawaiian Islands and elsewhere; that has had a good deal to do with the admission of these ships to American registry.

I am glad to find that there is a feeling on our side of the House that there is something involved in the Republican policy of those trying to build up the merchant marine. I take occasion to say that if the policy that has been adopted in this House and in the Senate for the past ten months is to prevail, there will not be a shipyard in the United States, three years from to-day, building ships for the American merchant marine for seagoing vessels. These shipyards will go where the Virginia yard went a few days ago. There are not many shipyards in Massachusetts that can stand the loss of a half a million dollars a year, as one is said to be doing now.

This whole policy is involved right here, and yet when you talk about upbuilding the merchant marine men who want to subsidize the irrigation of the public lands, and who want to subsidize the creameries of the country, and subsidize the fast mails to the South, are shouting against subsidies to the American merchant marine. We are paying $200,000,000 a year to laborers in foreign countries while our own laborers are standing still. [Applause.] The condition I refer to is not met by the condition of our inland shipyards on the Great Lakes. I refer to our shipbuilding industries engaged in building ships for ocean service, and which have to meet the crushing competition of European shipyards.

Mr. FORDNEY. Will the gentleman from Maine use his time now?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I will after the gentleman has used some more of his time; then I will use the balance of my time.

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield two minutes to my colleague from Michigan [Mr. HENRY C. SMITH].

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, the main fact in this case is that if the ship had met with the disaster in American waters she would under the general law have been entitled to American registry, for there is no question but what the amount spent upon her meets the requirements of the statute. My friend from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] may talk about the definitions of the dictionary, but the definition of the Commissioner of Navigation, backed by the opinion of the Attorney-General, brings this case within the law, with this exception, that the vessel was wrecked just a few miles beyond American waters. That is the situation. And let me say to the gentleman from Maine that under this bill it is finally left for the Commissioner of Navigation to admit this vessel to an American register if the expense, labor, and material—American labor and material—put upon the vessel in America shall meet the requirements of that statute. If those requirements are not met the vessel is not entitled to American registry.

Now, this is only a question of letting these gentlemen from my State enter into competition in the coastwise trade of the United States with the constituents of the gentleman from Maine, and as between the two we simply ask that the same consideration and the same treatment be accorded to the citizen of Michigan that has been accorded to the citizens of the various States in the case of 28 other boats under similar conditions.

This legislation proposed is eminently just, fair, and equitable. The ship, as reconstructed and rebuilt and made ready for service, becomes and in reality is an American-built boat, for under the law three-fourths at least of her value must be made up of American material and American labor. This being so, there can be no danger that enactments of this kind will in any serious manner injure American shipbuilders. In the case of this boat under consideration, which had only been in commission about ten months, she was substantially new and worth no doubt $200,000. She was on a trip from Boston, with a cargo destined to Cape Breton Islands. She was owned by citizens of England, carrying the flag of Great Britain, manned and controlled by British sailors.

As she was rounding the point below the Bay of Fundy in a severe storm, she is cast upon the rocks—fairly driven into the rock—on Chebogue Point, Nova Scotia, only a little over a hundred miles eastward from the coast of Maine. By this disaster her value is taken from her; she is destroyed. The wreck is such—she is so embedded in the rock—that the Canadian wreckers, ripe in experience, are not able to rescue her. She is given up to perish. An American citizen, with Yankee genius and Yankee grit, undertook the saving of this boat, and by a feat worthy of commemoration blasted away the rock—blasted a canal through which this ship was drawn to the deep water. The owner came to the aid of the wrecker and paid $50,000 for the boat as she lay stranded on the rocks. He paid the wreckers for their services $51,000 more. And now he must expend from one hundred to one hundred and fifty thousand dollars in addition before she is seaworthy—before she can enter into the coastwise trade. She was rated A 1, and we need just such ships as this.

The contention made by some that our merchant marine will be made up of rebuilt wrecked boats is, I submit, without merit. It is claimed that because ships can be built for less money in foreign lands than here at home—25 per cent less, I think it is claimed—that ships will be built elsewhere and wrecked conveniently, or otherwise, bought up on speculation, and with the hope that Congress will give them American registry, and that the shipyards of America will be ruined. And appeal is made to protect American labor and American interests. And the claim is made that this legislation is in the line of setting aside tariff principles. I submit that there need be no well-grounded fear in these directions. And I want to say further, the shipyards are now overtaxed, that American labor has made no complaint, and, as I have before said, the greater part of the value of this boat is now made up of and is the result of American material and American labor. And if such argument were to apply to the case under consideration, it would apply with equal force to boats which are wrecked within American waters. And this would have been a good argument to have urged when Congress passed the act permitting American registry to ships which were wrecked within American waters. And it would be an equally good argument favoring the repeal of this act if this was before the House.

But so long as the law remains as it is and this legislation is simply to remove the technical bar of the boat being destroyed just outside of American waters and saved under circumstances of equity which moved the committee to favorably report the bill, it is respectfully submitted that relief should be granted to the owner, an American citizen, and that no one will be seriously harmed. When the act of Congress permitting registry of foreign vessels wrecked in American waters was under discussion before the committee and before the House, when it was passed, the question was considered as to foreign-built boats wrecked in foreign waters near to the American coast, and the claim was made that the equities might be strong in favor of admitting such boats to registry, and the answer was made that cases of special merit might receive favorable consideration and the technical provision of the statute removed.

Since 1884 nearly 200 boats have been admitted to American registry—foreign boats wrecked over here. And since the year 1895 there have by special acts of Congress been 28 foreign-built ships admitted to American registry, and admitted to engage in the coastwise trade in free and equal competition with American-built ships, and which met disaster and were wrecked in foreign waters. And these were saved and rescued by foreign wreckers, bought and owned and repaired in American shipyards by American owners. Here are 28 precedents for the action which the House is asked to take. And this case is even stronger than the others, for in this case, as I have said, the boat was rescued and saved by an American wrecker.

None but selfish interests object to this legislation. The Secretary of the Treasury has frequently and freely expressed the policy of that Department not to be in opposition to such legislation.

We simply ask that Congress act for the public good and not for the special benefit and advantage of any particular community or neighborhood. The greatest good to the greatest number, a fair field and no favor, equal rights and justice to all, and special favors to none.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. Five minutes.

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON].

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Speaker, I believe in the passage of this bill, because it is in accordance with the best business policy. If anyone could object, it is the owners of the shipyards. The shipyards of the country are overrun with orders. They are months and years behind. At any rate, the demand for shipping property is very much in excess of the supply.

In regard to the admission of foreign vessels to American registry after having been wrecked, our policy has been liberal. This vessel was saved by an American wrecking company after a Canadian wrecking company had given her up. That forms an additional reason in favor of passing this bill. I, like the gentleman from Pennsylvania, am a protectionist, but I do not believe in the abuse or exaggeration of that policy.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker, my information does not accord with that of the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], that our shipyards are overrun with orders. I do not understand that to be by any means the fact, and I get my information directly from the yards themselves.

I have just had a conference with the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] who was chairman of this committee for four years, on the question as to whether salvage was ever considered by this committee in determining the amount of "repairs;" and he tells me that his recollection is that in no instance while he was chairman was any vessel ever admitted by that committee to a new registry in a case where salvage was computed as repairs. Every maritime lawyer knows that salvage is covered by maritime insurance and it is a part of the maritime enterprise; salvage enters into the element of insurance and is entirely distinct from repairs. This whole case as presented here rests upon this question, whether salvage can be counted as repairs. This bill itself, drawn by the attorneys of the gentlemen who make this application, contradicts their position, because the terms of this bill are:

> Whenever it shall be shown to the Commissioner of Navigation that the salvage and the repairs made in a United States shipyard have amounted to three times the price paid for the wreck to her foreign owners, exclusive of salvage.

If salvage is included in the repairs, why does the attorney who drew this bill say "the salvage and the repairs." He knows that the salvage is not included. He knows that saving a vessel can not be done in American shipyards because it is done upon the high seas, and therefore can not be called repairs.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I print by leave herewith my minority views in this case.

AMERICAN REGISTER FOR THE SHIP MIRA.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD, from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, submitted the following minority views to accompany H. R. 16734:

The minority of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee herewith submits reasons why this bill should not pass.

This is an application for an American register for a foreign-built steamer called the Mira. As we understand this case, the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee early in the last session deliberately adopted a policy to which it was proposed to adhere in passing upon applications of this sort. That policy may be found declared in the adverse reports in the cases of the Antiope, H. R. 3788, report No. 1842; the Admiral Tromp, S. 2705, report No. 1844, and the Melanope, H. R. 6035, report No. 1843, and is therein stated as follows:

"The committee are of the opinion that the immemorial policy of this country to preserve for American-built vessels its coastwise trade intact, and any other privilege to which they may be specially entitled, should be maintained.

"The general law has for a long time authorized under specific and well-defined conditions the granting of American registry to a foreign vessel. We do not believe that any such vessels should be admitted to American registry except in strict accordance with these conditions, unless there appears to be some extraordinary and unforeseen circumstances that clearly justify and require departure from this general rule."

The statute referred to, section 4136, reads as follows:

"The Commissioner of Navigation may issue a register or enrollment for any vessel built in a foreign country, whenever such vessel shall be wrecked in the United States, and shall be purchased and repaired by a citizen of the United States, if it shall be proved to the satisfaction of the Commissioner that the repairs put upon such vessel are equal to three-fourths of the cost of the vessel when so repaired."

This has been the law of this country since December 23, 1852.

The facts in this case are, briefly, as follows:

About a year ago the Mira was wrecked on the rocks of Chebogue Point, Nova Scotia, 100 miles from the nearest point in the United States, while on a voyage from Boston bound for Cape Breton. She was salved by one James Reid, of Port Huron, Mich. After having been salved she was towed to Halifax, Nova Scotia, where the beneficiary in this bill, Mr. W. A. Gilchrist, purchased her at auction of her foreign owners for the sum of $50,000 in cash, subject to the salvage charges, which were $51,000, making the actual cost of the Mira in Halifax as she then stood, to her purchaser, $101,000. There were ample facilities for her repair at Halifax, so that there was no occasion for her removal for that purpose.

She has been since towed to the Cramps' shipyards, where she is being repaired under contract to repair her hull and machinery for the sum of $71,500. It is claimed and estimated that something like $30,000 may be further expended in fitting her for sea, although no detail of the estimate was made or filed with the committee, and no contracts appear to have been made therefor.

It appeared before the committee that she was purchased by Mr. Gilchrist with the full knowledge that she was a foreign-built ship; that he knew there was no law authorizing her admission to American registry, and that he was gambling upon his chances, under the circumstances, of securing an American registry for her after she was repaired. It further appeared that he bought her upon the word of one Samuel Holmes, a ship broker of New York.

There did not appear to be any reason why he should make the investment, except on the basis of making the purchase at a low price with a hope of getting the registry after the repairs, and thus adding very greatly to her value, unless, as was suggested by him, motives of personal friendship to Mr. Reid, who, it was said, was unable from a financial standpoint to properly protect his interest in the vessel as the salvor thereof by purchasing the vessel subject to said salvage. Therefore Gilchrist was under no obligation of any kind to him and under no obligation to purchase. Mr. Gilchrist is a purchaser of the vessel with a full knowledge of her legal character and all of the chances involved in the enterprise and assumed the risks without any hesitation or question. There are no "extraordinary and unforseen circumstances" in this case. On the contrary, the circumstances are ordinary and everything foreseen and can probably be substantially duplicated in many applications.

This vessel does not come within either of the provisions of the statute granting American registry to wrecked foreign vessels.

First, it is of course clear and beyond dispute that she was not wrecked in the waters of the United States. The only other question remaining is whether the repairs to be put upon the vessel are equal to "three-fourths of the cost" thereof. The total cost of this vessel is as follows: $101,000, purchase price (which includes value of wreck, $50,000, and expenses of salvage, $51,000); contract for repairs with the Cramps, $71,500; additional repairs, according to the claim and estimate of Mr. Gilchrist, $30,000, aggregating $202,500 as the total cost. One-quarter of this sum is $50,650, and three-fourths would be $151,950, the amount necessary under the second provision of section 4136 to be expended by her owner in order to entitle her to registry under that clause. The total sum of $202,500, we have no doubt, is the extreme limit of the cost of this vessel. We have no doubt that the $30,000 for the additional repairs is also the extreme limit for those, as the only estimate furnished to the committee was that furnished by Mr. Gilchrist, and it is fair to presume that he would not minimize the amount.

The total amount of "repairs put upon such vessel," according to this statement, would be only equal to $101,500, instead of the necessary $151,950 to entitle her to a register under that clause. So it will be seen that under neither of the provisions in the general statute would this vessel be entitled to any consideration.

But it is suggested by the beneficiary that the salvage, $51,000, should be reckoned as "repairs," and, in fact, is "repairs" within the meaning of this section of the statute. The first suggestion to be made upon this point is that the bill drawn by his attorney and now pending before the House distinctly negatives that contention, as it concedes and assumes that salvage is not a part of the repairs. It authorizes the register of the Mira under the name of Beaumont, "whenever it shall be shown to the Commissioner of Navigation that the salvage and the repairs made in a United States shipyard have amounted to three times the price paid for the wreck to her foreign owners, exclusive of salvage."

It is very clear that the attorney who drew this bill knew that the term "repairs" was not sufficient to include salvage; otherwise salvage would not have been specified as one of the elements making up the total amount of "three times the price." The term "repairs made in a United States shipyard" is undoubtedly one that is common to all bills in this class of legislation and is, perhaps, intended to express in the act the spirit of the law. The incongruity of assuming that salvage is a part of the repairs appears very obviously in that connection. The bill says that "whenever it shall be shown to the Commissioner of Navigation that the salvage and the repairs made in a United States shipyard have amounted to, etc." The gross absurdity of "salvage" "made in the United States shipyards" is too obvious for discussion, and simply illustrates the inconsistency of including salvage in the term "repairs."

The attention of the committee was called to several decisions by Attorneys-General and officers of the Department construing the term "repairs" under this section to mean and include "salvage." The earliest opinion appears to have been given by Attorney-General Crittenden, February 14, 1853, and is found in volume 5, Opinions of Attorney-General, page 674–675. In order to reach the conclusion that "salvage" was a part of "repairs" and properly included in that term, in order to make up the necessary three-fourths to entitle the vessel to registry under that provision, the Attorney-General had recourse to what he calls "the definition of the verb 'to repair' as given by standard lexicons," which he says is "to restore to a sound or good state after decay, injury, dilapidation, or partial destruction;" "to recover." The first thing to be suggested about this definition is that it is a definition of the verb "to repair," and not a definition of the noun "repairs," which is the word used in the statute. Without stopping to analyze it, I think it clear that the verb "to repair" has more significance and a wider and broader meaning than the noun "repairs" used in the statute, but the Attorney-General in this case apparently based his conclusion upon the term "to recover," as he says: "In the case legislated for, the thing injured is a vessel; the injury to it is by being wrecked; that wreck is to be recovered, repaired, restored to a good state after having been wrecked, etc."

"The first movement in the repairing of a wrecked vessel would necessarily be to recover her from the submarine or fixed situation."

It is apparently because of this extended meaning of "to recover" that the Attorney-General construes the term "repairs" to cover everything from the beginning of the accident to the vessel to the time she reaches the shipyard and is actually repaired in the yard.

I have examined a number of the standard lexicons, and we give the definitions found therein herewith:

The Century says: "Repair: To restore to a sound, good, or complete state after decay, injury, dilapidation, or partial destruction; restore; renovate."

Bouvier's Law Dictionary defines "repairs" as follows:

"That work which is done to property to keep it in good order. Repair is held to mean to restore to a sound state after decay, injury, dilapidation, or partial injury."

Anderson defines "repairs" as follows:

"To replace a building as it was or to restore it after injury or dilapidation; not to enlarge or elevate it by raising it a story or extending its sides."

Webster defines "repair, v. t.," as follows:

"To restore to a sound or good state after decay, injury, or partial destruction; to renew, to restore, to mend, as to repair a house, a road, a shoe, or a ship."

"Repairs, noun: Restoration to a sound or good state after decay, waste, injury, or partial destruction; supply of loss; reparation, as materials are collected for the repair of a church or a city."

Black's Law Dictionary gives the following definition:

"Repairs: Restoration to soundness; supply of loss; reparation; work done to an estate to keep it in order."

"Repair means to restore to its former condition; not to change either the form or material of a building."

In Worcester I find the only definition that even remotely tends to sustain the opinion of the Attorney-General quoted. He gives various definitions of the word "repairs," as follows:

"Repair, v. a. 1. To restore or make good after injury, dilapidation, or loss; to mend; to refit; to retrieve.

"2. To make amends for; to redress.

"3. To recover (a Latinism).

"Repair, n. Act of repairing or state of being repaired, restoration after injury, dilapidation or loss; reparation; amends; redress."

It is significant, however, to note that this term "to recover," given as a definition by Worcester, is stated by him to be "obsolete." When it appears that the opinion of the Attorney-General, delivered in 1853, is mainly based upon a construction of the word "repairs" and an enlargement of its term which rests altogether upon a definition which was obsolete, it seems to me that it is by no means a safe or proper guide in construing legislation which we feel safe in assuming was written in language that was in common use and as ordinarily understood, and not in a vernacular and in accordance with a meaning that had ceased to exist.

The definition of the term "salvage" is extremely significant in indicating that "salvage" can not by any means include "repairs," and also indicating that it is a practical impossibility for the term "repairs" to include "salvage."

"Salvage" is defined by Anderson as follows:

"1. Allowance for saving a ship or goods from the danger of the seas, from fire, pirates, or enemies.

"The compensation allowed to persons by whose voluntary assistance a ship at sea or her cargo or both have been saved in whole or in part from impending sea peril, or in recovering such property from actual peril or loss, as in cases of shipwreck, derelict, or recapture."

It is not necessary to argue that this definition could not by any stretch of language or construction be held to include "repairs," and it is equally difficult to see how "repairs" used in its ordinary signification, as it must have been used in this legislation, can be held to include "salvage." From a maritime standpoint they are two absolutely distinct matters, neither having any connection with or dependence upon the other. What would be said if under a statute giving a lien for repairs a lien was undertaken to be enforced for salvage or vice versa?

It is no doubt clear that the statute contemplates the performance of the "repairs" in an American shipyard, although the statute does not so state. This bill assumes that the "repairs" are to be performed in an American shipyard, but how can "salvage" be performed in an American shipyard? In fact, all the "salvage" in this instance was performed in a foreign country, as the salvage charge was figured at $51,000 and had been incurred when the vessel was sold in Halifax.

If it was proposed now to confine the expenditures to "repairs," what more apt language could be used than now appears in the statute?

The case of the Pyrenees, now pending before the committee, is a very apt illustration of an absurd result that would follow if "salvage" was to be construed as "repairs" under the provisions of this general law.

The Pyrenees was wrecked more than 2,000 miles from San Francisco. Without having seen her, her present owner purchased her for $1,250, and then proceeded to save her and get her to San Francisco.

When she reached San Francisco, without having had anything put upon her in repairs, the cost of saving her and getting her to San Francisco exceeded the sum of $20,000.

If salvage is to be reckoned as repairs, independent of the question of her having been wrecked outside of the waters of the United States, this vessel would have been entitled to an American register under the general law without ever having had a dollar of actual repairs expended upon her.

In fact, none has been expended upon her, and so far as that provision of the statute is concerned, she is now entitled, if this theory is sound, to an American register, waiving, for the purposes of illustration, the fact that she was wrecked outside of American waters, because the amount expended for "salvage" construed as "repairs" has been nearly twenty times the amount of her original cost to her owner. This illustration could be very easily duplicated in a great many instances if "salvage" is to be construed as "repairs."

We submit, therefore, that the rule adopted by the Department is unsupported by a proper construction of the statute and that this vessel does not come and will not come within either of the provisions of the statute.

There was nothing out of the ordinary in her wrecking and there was nothing "unforeseen" by anybody connected with the transaction in any of the circumstances. In fact, everything was seen, known, understood, and anticipated. If the committee is to stand by the rule which it has already adopted, which I believe to be right, and treat all applicants alike, then this vessel, in our judgment, is clearly not entitled to the register asked for, and the bill should be refused a passage.

C. E. LITTLEFIELD.

Mr. FORDNEY. I now yield to my colleague [Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH].

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] and his distinguished predecessor, the late Mr. Dingley, disagree entirely upon the doctrine of protection. Under the leadership of Mr. Dingley 30,000 tons of foreign shipping was permitted to come in under our flag. What was the object of the registry law? It was to encourage American shipping and preserve the shipbuilding market for American workmen; and the gentleman from Maine knows very well——

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Michigan yield?

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I can not yield.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Although I yielded to you, you will not yield to me.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I can not yield. You had twenty minutes; I have two. The gentleman knows that the doctrine of protection described by Mr. DALZELL is not at stake at all. These registry laws were originally passed in the administration of George Washington; they have been constantly guarded ever since. During the war of the rebellion when some ships sought to go out from under the American flag because they lacked faith in our Government and feared we could not protect them we properly refused them admittance when they sought to come back. Sir, there has never been a time when Congress could equitably refuse an American register to a ship bearing the marks of the American hammer upon its keel. Every gentleman on this side of the chamber familiar with the facts knows that the owner of this ship showed genuine American enterprise and courage when he went upon the rocks of Nova Scotia and blasted this ship off with American labor and towed her into an American shipyard to be rebuilt.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. He did not do it.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. And has already spent $71,000 upon her and will expend more. I say it is the height of unwisdom—it is political bigotry personified—to say that this American citizen, the owner of 60 ships, all of which fly our flag, shall now be driven under a foreign register and compelled to fly the English flag in order to operate this ship in American waters. [Applause.] Why, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] says that he must protect the shipping interests in his State. Well, there are shipowners in his State that are flying foreign flags over their ships to-day. [Applause.] Let this Congress, at least in cases of real merit, invite American citizens, whose ships are manned by American sailors, to sail the seas under the ensign of the United States. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] has two minutes remaining.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, as against the sum of $224,000 expended in wrecks within a certain given time, in American and adjacent waters, American labor in American shipyards has received over $3,000,000. I was present at a meeting of the subcommittee the other day, and the shipbuilding interests who opposed this measure were ashamed to be personally present, but sent two lawyers there, and the money in dollars and cents invested by the concerns thus represented by those two gentlemen, compared with the shipping interests of this country and the shipbuilding interests of the country, does not amount to a flyspeck on the map of the world. [Laughter.] One of the gentlemen who was present stated that his company had protested against bidding on the ship, and that statement was met by the statement of the owner of this vessel that the gentleman's company, the Newport News Shipbuilding Company, had put in a bid on this very vessel, which bid had been rejected, and because that company did not receive something out of the pie, as you might term it, it comes in here and protests through its attorney. When the question was put to this man he said, "Oh, pardon me, but I did not know that that was so." Mr. Speaker, that is all I care to say. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DALZELL) there were—ayes 143, noes 24.

So (two-thirds having voted in the affirmative) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

COOSA RIVER.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass, with the committee amendments, the bill (S. 6231) authorizing Robert A. Chapman, of Alabama, his associates and assigns, to use the waters in the Coosa River, in Alabama, for the purpose of generating electricity, which I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Robert A. Chapman and his associates are authorized to erect, construct, and maintain a dam across the Coosa River, in Alabama, at lock No. 25, 26, 27, or 28, as now indicated by the Government survey of said river, with all other works incident thereto, for water-power purposes for generating electricity: Provided, That plans, specifications, and exact location of said dam shall first be submitted to and approved by the Secretary of War: And provided further, That the said Robert A. Chapman and his associates shall, at their own expense, make such changes and modifications of said dam and appurtenant works as the Secretary of War may from time to time direct in the interest of the navigation of said river: And provided also, That ladders suitable for the passage of fish over such dam shall be constructed and maintained by the said Robert A. Chapman and his associates as may be from time to time required by the United States Fish Commissioner: And provided further, That this act shall not be construed as authorizing any invasion or impairment of the legal rights of any person or corporation, and any litigation that may arise from the construction and maintenance of said dam or its appurtenant works may be tried in the proper courts of the State of Alabama and the courts of the United States.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

SEC. 3. That this act shall be null and void unless the dam herein authorized shall be commenced within two years from the date hereof.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

In line 19, page 2, strike out the words "two years" and insert in lieu thereof the words "one year and completed within three years;" and in line 20, page 2, after the word "date," insert the words "of approval."

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Speaker, on this bill I demand a second.

Mr. THOMPSON of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. THOMPSON] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] to control the time for and against the bill.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, this bill is to authorize Robert Chapman and associates to use the waters of the Coosa River in Alabama for the purpose of generating electricity. The bill has been drawn under the supervision of the Secretary of War, and has the approval of Mr. Gillespie, Chief of Engineers of the United States, and provides that it shall not in any way interfere with navigation. It is subject to repeal, as other bills of a similar character which have been passed, and I can see no objection to the passage of this bill. I hope that it may be passed, as many bills of a similar character have been passed. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Speaker, I have no personal interest whatever in this bill, but I do not think the House ought to pass it without understanding just what it is. It is a proposition to grant to an individual and his associates the right to construct a dam in the Coosa River in the State of Alabama. Let us briefly review the history of that river. We have been improving it at an expense of about $1,500,000 in order to render it navigable. The proposed improvement contemplates, when it is completed, the construction of 31 dams, at an expense of not less than $6,000,000. It will be remembered by the House that at the last session the Committee on Rivers and Harbors opposed the extensive improvement of this river, not thinking it worth while; so I think I may say for the committee, and certainly for myself, that we have no objection to the use of the river for the purposes of creating water power, and the entire or partial abandonment of navigation.

It is said that it affords for water power as great possibilities as any river in the United States, but, Mr. Speaker, I am just enough of a States' rights man to believe it entirely improper for this Congress to pick out different rivers in the United States and say that A B may construct a dam there and C D there and E F another there. I submit that if we do anything upon this bill we ought to declare that the river is not navigable, and then let the State of Alabama determine who shall enjoy this water power. When we have done that we have done all that the Congress of the United States ought to do. If it is navigable we ought not to give the right to anyone to construct a dam. If it is not navigable the common law and the statutes of Alabama are sufficient to determine who shall enjoy the privilege. There is no reservation of the right of navigation here except the promise to be obtained from the parties that they shall make such changes as are required in the future. But the bill specifies that a dam shall be built there. That means an abandonment for purposes of navigation.

Mr. HAMILTON. If the gentleman will pardon me, have we not, by a clause in the river and harbor act of 1898, compelled A, B, C, and D to come here and ask permission to construct dams in streams which are navigable in more than one State?

Mr. BURTON. In rare instances that has been done. The first bill of that nature which I find was passed in the year 1884, and perhaps eight or ten have been passed.

Mr. HAMILTON. No; but was there not an amendment in the river and harbor act of 1898 saying that where a stream is navigable in more than one State it may not be obstructed by dams or bridges without the consent of Congress? Is not that the provision, in effect? Hence it becomes necessary for this gentleman and others to come here and ask the consent of Congress for the construction of specific dams. Is that not so?

Mr. BURTON. Oh, the general rule is, of course, that if Congress exercises supervision, then and in that case the action of Congress must be had to take away the navigable quality of the stream.

Mr. HAMILTON. But we can not evade it.

Mr. BURTON. But what we should do is to declare that the river is not navigable. Does this man own the land adjacent? I would like to ask that question. Can the gentleman state whether this Robert Chapman owns the land adjacent to these locks here?

Mr. THOMPSON. I can not answer that question.

Mr. BURTON. What right does he have to locate there?

Mr. THOMPSON. I do not know whether he owns the land adjacent to the property or not, but the bill provides that this act shall not be construed as authorizing any invasion or impairment of the legal rights of any person or corporation, and that any litigation that may arise from the maintenance or construction of said dams may be tried in the proper courts of the State of Alabama and in the courts of the United States.

The bill provides that the parties owning the abutting property, where they propose to build, shall have their litigation adjudicated in the courts of Alabama.

Mr. BURTON. Ah, but the gentleman must recognize that we give a special advantage to this man and his associates by passing this bill. We give them an advantage over all others.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. MADDOX. Is it contemplated in this bill that these men shall build dams wherever they see proper to build them?

Mr. BURTON. At three or four places, at the locations heretofore selected by the Government engineers for locks.

Mr. MADDOX. Is it not a fact that the Government has now provided for a survey?

Mr. BURTON. The Government has provided for a survey and located locks 25, 26, 27, and 28. I believe those are the numbers. Those are the specified locations for locks to be built to promote navigation. Now, it is specified in this bill——

Mr. MADDOX. There is a further specification for a new survey of that river in the last river and harbor act.

Mr. BURTON. I believe so; yes.

Mr. MADDOX. It seems to me if what is asked for in this bill is allowed, why, it will be very much in the way of the Government.

Mr. BURTON. It would certainly tend toward the abandonment of the river for that purpose.

Mr. MADDOX. It seems so to me, and for that reason I shall oppose it.

Mr. THOMPSON. Does not this bill provide that these dams shall be built at the very places designated by the Corps of Engineers of the Government where these proposed Government locks are to be built in case the Government undertakes to improve the river?

Mr. BURTON. It does; and let me add——

Mr. THOMPSON. I want the gentleman from Georgia to understand that this dam is to be built under the supervision of the Board of Engineers employed by the Government.

Mr. BURTON. Let me explain that more fully. We have had a number of these bills, and in every case where it is intended that navigation shall be promoted we have also provided that a lock shall be constructed. This does not contemplate the construction of any lock. It contemplates the construction of a dam, which would be an absolute barrier to the navigation of the river. It can be nothing else. You can not get through on a stream where there is a fall of 12 feet with a dam only. You must have a lock, which provides a chamber where the boat may rise and fall.

I will ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. THOMPSON] if it is not true that there is a statutory provision for the construction of dams for purposes of water power in that State?

Mr. THOMPSON. Not where the water power is navigable.

Mr. BURTON. There is none where it is navigable?

Mr. THOMPSON. No, sir; and this is considered a navigable stream.

I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] if section 2 of this bill does not provide that when the Government shall undertake to improve this river for purposes of navigation this bill shall be repealed or amended, as the Chief of Engineers may direct?

Mr. BURTON. Section 2 has the usual provision giving the right to alter, amend, or repeal; but I do not believe the gentleman thinks that after a dam is authorized there, after a plan for improvement has been under consideration for thirty years, and that work is partially, completed we will alter, amend, or repeal. Does the gentleman from Alabama think that such legislation would be quite fair to a man who should construct a dam there for purposes of water power?

Mr. THOMPSON. I want to say that if the Government will not remove it I would not advocate this bill. The parties asking this special privilege understand that the Government has the right to make this improvement for navigation purposes and that they were so to construct their dam as to conform with the requirements of the Government if it wants a lock.

Mr. BURTON. Then I would ask the gentleman from Alabama why was not the bill drawn in the ordinary form for the construction of both a lock and a dam instead of a dam alone?

Mr. THOMPSON. I am not the author of the bill. It was drawn by Senator PETTUS, of Alabama, and has the unanimous report from the Senate committee as well as the unanimous report of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HAMILTON. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio for information. How far up is Coosa River navigable?

Mr. BURTON. This portion of it is not navigable at all, because the fall is very precipitous. It is navigable above for a considerable distance and below for a short space. I want the gentleman from Michigan to understand that I have no objection to any project that means the abandonment of the navigation of that river. I fear the contemplated improvement for navigation will be too expensive, but I think the House ought to understand what we are doing in this case.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill with the amendment.

Mr. THOMPSON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I have listened to what the gentleman from Ohio has said in reference to this bill, and notwithstanding what he has said, I think the House ought to pass this bill. Now, if there was any doubt about the position the River and Harbor Committee or the position that the House of Representatives takes or intends to take in reference to the navigation of this river, then I would not be in favor of permanently building a dam across it. But the gentleman from Ohio reported last year that he did not think it wise for the Government to attempt to improve this river. Now that means, for the present at least, the Government of the United States intends to spend no money whatever toward making this river navigable. It is not navigable. As a matter of fact, it is merely navigable on paper, and classed as a navigable river by the Government.

Now, the committee over which the gentleman from Ohio so ably presides has distinctly said to this House that they would not vote a further appropriation to improve that river at this time. So this question comes here. The people of Alabama want to get the use and benefit of this stream. They can not get the use and benefit of it as a navigable river, because the Congress of the United States has said in this House that it is not going to improve it. They come and ask, as has been asked in a number of bills, that they may put a dam across that river and use the water for the purpose of generating electricity. The bill provides that whenever Congress says that the Government needs the water on the river for navigation this dam shall come down. It provides that this work shall be done under the supervision of the Chief of Engineers of the Army. If you vote down this bill, what do you do? Do you increase navigation? You do not improve the navigation. If you were, I would not be in favor of the bill. But you will let this water run over these bluffs and waterfalls, where the people can never get the benefit of it. You say that it shall be useless, absolutely useless to the people of Alabama.

Mr. BURTON. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. BURTON. Is it not true that by the common law as well as by the statutes of Alabama, if there is a stream that affords water power the abutting owners can utilize that water power? Do you not have a provision in your probate court for having the damages assessed?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think so. This river is navigable on paper. It is classed as a navigable stream, but as a matter of fact it is not. Of course the gentleman from Ohio knows if it were not classed as a navigable river there would be nothing in the way of the people at all. This portion of the river is not navigable, and it is not proposed to make it navigable.

Now, under these circumstances, is Congress going to deprive the people of Alabama of the right to use the waters of this river for useful purposes. If it was a new venture, or something never done before, there might be something in the gentleman's argument. But only a week ago you passed a bill in this House, and it is the law to-day, in reference to the construction of dams on the Tennessee River—a navigable river. You have passed since I have been a member of this House at least 25 or 30 bills of this kind, to my knowledge, on rivers known as navigable, for the purpose of allowing the citizens of the State to use the water power. And why in this case, after passing all of these bills, in a river where the gentleman's own committee says that we have closed it as a navigable river and will not appropriate money to allow of its improvement and make it actually navigable, why, under circumstances of that kind, will you refuse to allow the people of the State to have the benefit of the use they can make of the water?

So far as the riparian owners are concerned, the bill provides that this can only be done by the courts of Alabama. If there is any damage, this bill provides that the riparian owners shall be paid. The Government rights are protected, the rights of the individual citizen of the State are protected, and at any time, under the terms of this law, the dam can be pulled down. Now, why not grant this right?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from Alabama misunderstood me. I by no means desire to restrict the citizens of that State from the opportunity to use this water power, but I say there is a proper way to go about it, by declaring that this stream is nonnavigable at that point, and thus let those who are the abutting owners and are granted the right by Alabama to improve it. We ought not to allow any citizen to go down there with the prestige that would come from a bill of this character, so that he could say that the National Legislature has granted to him the right to use that river there and to nobody else.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If this was the only bill, there might be something in what the gentleman says. But we have passed a number of bills of this character granting special privileges.

Mr. BURTON. The gentleman must notice that there is a clear distinction between this and these other cases. Those cases were where the work was constructed by the Government and a headway made by a dam and the right to draw off the water was given. This is a radically different proposition. This proposes the building of a dam, absolutely stopping the flow of the water, with reservations which are put in rather as a matter of form than otherwise, with a view to the future demands of navigation. One case is where the Government owns the land and allows the privilege to a citizen or corporation to draw off or divert water. Those are the frequent cases to which the gentleman from Alabama refers.

This is an absolute privilege to an individual to construct a dam. It is practically saying that Robert Chapman and his associates are the only men who, in four localities, the best localities on the river, can construct dams. I really think the gentleman will find himself, as I have found, that protests will come in against giving this exclusive privilege, this monopoly, to one person to build a dam. It seems to me that the privilege should be thrown open to the public.

Mr. MOON. If the gentleman will allow me, I want to suggest that I have a letter from Mr. Davis, who alleges that he is the owner of 40 acres of land adjoining this proposed dam, and he protests against the passage of this bill.

Mr. BURTON. I have received myself four or five protests, sent to me under the impression that this matter was coming before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. I now yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. MADDOX].

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, the fact is that there are about 250 miles of the river which is navigable above this proposed obstruction; above this place where they want a charter to build dams. Probably for 250 miles below it is navigable to the Gulf. We are trying to get the obstructions out of the river so as to get navigation to the bay. The last river and harbor bill provides for a survey, a new survey, for that purpose—in other words, to see if it is possible for us to remove these obstructions and get them out of the way so that we can open up the river for navigation.

This survey is either going on now or will be at an early day. Here is a bill which proposes to give to some private individual or corporation the authority to build a dam somewhere. It is said or claimed that they could put the dam where the engineers say it should be put. I say they can not put it there, because it has not been surveyed. I am opposed to giving any corporation this right. Now, I want to say to my friend from Alabama that whenever you give these people such a right you will have them here fighting, doing all they can to prevent the opening of this river, which will be of so much benefit to all in that country. I know there is a sentiment here that is very eager and anxious to prevent this river from being opened. I know where it is and where it comes from, and so does the gentleman from Alabama. I do not want this river further obstructed. I do not want to grant this privilege to any individual or corporation.

Mr. THOMPSON. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption?

Mr. MADDOX. Yes.

Mr. THOMPSON. The gentleman says the survey has not been made. Is he not aware of the fact that three or four Government surveys of this river have been made, and that all locks and dams have been designated by these surveys?

Mr. MADDOX. Yes; and is not the gentleman aware that the last Congress ignored the whole business and ordered a new survey?

Mr. THOMPSON. I am.

Mr. MADDOX. Well, that survey will have to be made.

Mr. THOMPSON. This bill provides that locks and dams shall be put where the Government survey provides.

Mr. MADDOX. It does not provide for any lock.

Mr. THOMPSON. It provides for the dams where locks and dams are designated.

Mr. MADDOX. The gentleman is just as much interested in this matter as I am. He can not do anything more effective against opening this river than by pushing this bill to its passage. If that object should be carried out you will find a combination here in Congress that will try to prevent the opening of that river, which is such a great necessity to our people.

Besides, I am opposed to giving these privileges to one single corporation upon a river that is now opened and being navigated 250 miles at one end and 300 miles at the other. We want these obstructions cleared away; we do not want to have navigation obstructed by these people; and if a dam be put there it will beyond doubt be put at the wrong place when the engineers come to decide upon the question, and we shall have to pay money to remove it. For these reasons I think the bill ought not to pass; I hope it will not.

Mr. THOMPSON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, the truth is that the Coosa River above this stretch is navigable by small boats. Down below it is also navigable for a considerable distance. It would not do to come in with a bill or agreement declaring the Coosa River nonnavigable, because that would do away with the hope of Federal betterment of the stream below and above. But the Coosa River where it passes through the mountains of north Alabama, in the neighborhood of Gadsden, is about the farthest possible from being navigable. In that region you have beautiful waterfalls and wild mountain torrents.

I do not see why the people there can not use that stretch of river for manufacturing purposes, especially when this bill reserves the right of the Government to improve this stream regardless of any right or privilege granted in the bill, and when there is also granted to the riparian owners their right of obstruction and defense if they imagine that their properties are interfered with. It seems to me that the power to use for manufacturing purposes this stretch of river in the mountains of north Alabama ought to be granted by Congress. It is evident it can not be granted by anybody else, because the river is recognized as a navigable stream subject to the exclusive jurisdiction of the Federal Government.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] has correctly stated this proposition. The Coosa River is navigable 142 miles above where it is proposed to build this dam, 78 miles of which is obstructed by shoals and rocks which, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors [Mr. BURTON] stated, would cost $20,000,000 to remove and to build locks and dams necessary to make this portion of the river navigable. In the discussion on the proposed appropriation for the Coosa River, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] said:

> I regard this project as the most objectionable of all those in the whole list of river and harbor improvements for which there have been recommendations made. It proposes, in a stretch of about 142 miles, to build 31 locks and dams. On that there has already been expended about $1,300,000. The balance required to complete it would be something over $6,000,000 according to the estimates made in 1890 and before. Captain Judson, an able young engineer, was in charge of this improvement, and he states frankly that when he first was assigned to duty there he thought favorably of it, but on further examination he was compelled to change his mind, first, because 4-foot navigation would not do any practical good.

Mr. MADDOX. Would the gentleman agree now with the gentleman from Ohio to abandon that river?

Mr. THOMPSON. No, sir; but I agree to abandon this dam—to condemn it—to repeal the law authorizing it whenever the Government declares itself ready to improve this navigation.

Mr. MADDOX. Which dam is the gentleman ready to abandon?

Mr. THOMPSON. The dam that this bill proposes to allow to be erected.

Mr. MADDOX. Where?

Mr. THOMPSON. At or near Wetumpka, Ala.

Mr. MADDOX. The United States Government has pretty well completed the dam, has it not?

Mr. THOMPSON. No, sir; nothing has been done on it. No work has been done on any dam at our end of the river. One lock has been constructed at Wetumpka.

Mr. MADDOX. There has been some considerable work done there?

Mr. THOMPSON. One lock has been built, but no dam. No work has been done on any dam on the lower end of the river.

Now, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] argued that the improvement of this river was very remote, even if it were contemplated by the Government to make it navigable. The distinguished gentleman from Iowa, in a speech delivered in Alabama on a tour of that State, said that Congress had thoroughly investigated this matter, and had decided that it would be cheaper to dig us a new river than to improve the Coosa. The House will see at once what probability there is of making this river navigable. No gentleman on the floor of this House, not even the distinguished gentleman from Georgia, Judge MADDOX, is more anxious than myself to have this river improved for navigation. I think it would prove of untold benefit to our section of the country, and I labored earnestly with the committee to give us an appropriation to carry on and to keep up this work; but after careful consideration they refused to do so, stating that it had less merit in it than any proposition that was presented to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Now, these gentlemen simply ask permission of this Congress that they be allowed to construct a dam, for the purpose of generating electricity, on that river 14 miles above Montgomery, which will enable them to use this electric power in the city of Montgomery and for the purpose of building and operating cotton factories and other manufacturing enterprises along the banks of the river, subject to the approval and under the direction of the Board of Engineers of the Government, with a definite understanding that whenever the Government proposes to improve this river, remove these obstructions, and make it navigable that they are required, under the provisions of this bill, to remove that dam, or so much of it as may be necessary, for the purpose of inserting locks, to carry out the plan proposed by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors whenever that committee gets ready to improve it. I hope this House will not refuse my people the right to use this water power until the Government sees fit to give us navigation upon this river. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has seven minutes remaining.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, in a general way I am inclined to agree with the gentleman from Ohio and the gentleman from Georgia, but this is a peculiar case. The Rivers and Harbors Committee during the last session of Congress, after very maturely considering this proposition and going over the whole question, came to the conclusion that it was unwise to enter upon the improvement of this river at this time, and perhaps at any time in the near future. To my mind, this river will some day be improved, but I am also of the opinion that the time is quite distant. In the meantime it seems to me that it would be a matter of economy to permit the construction of this dam by this corporation for the purpose of generating power of some kind, or, in other words, to harness this water power and put it to work and make it productive. The State of Alabama can not grant to any of her citizens the power to engage in this enterprise, because this is a navigable river under act of Congress, and the power to improve it or the power to interfere with it in any way can only come from Congress.

Mr. BURTON. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Certainly.

Mr. BURTON. Why is it that this privilege of using the water power at these four dams, so valuable that a United States engineer said it was worth more than the cost of improving the river, is by this bill absolutely restricted to one individual and his associates? Why is it not thrown open to the people of Alabama?

Mr. BANKHEAD. It is well known by the gentleman from Ohio that no single individual could engage in an enterprise of this magnitude. It will cost at least a half million of dollars, and the abutting property owners along this river, as a rule, are very poor men. I would not be surprised if it developed that the Government of the United States still holds the title to the land at some of these locks and dams, because it is of that character that individuals have not cared even to homestead it.

Now, the question is this in a nutshell: If this Congress is not willing to give authority to this company that has been organized for the purpose of developing this power and permit them to utilize the water, it must run waste for an indefinite period and be of no service to anybody. In this bill authority is given the Secretary of War to supervise the construction of this dam in every particular, and the right is reserved to Congress to repeal it at any time whenever the Government, through an act of Congress, shall decide to begin the improvement of the river. Now, Mr. Speaker, I know and I concede that this power, if properly utilized, is valuable, and I also know that unless a measure of this kind is passed and a company or corporation authorized to make this improvement it will never be utilized. Therefore I hope, under existing facts and circumstances, that Congress will consent that these parties may construct this dam with the view of utilizing the power, subject always, as it is provided in this bill, to the control of the Secretary of War and to repeal by Congress whenever it so desires.

Mr. BURTON. Would the gentleman from Alabama object to an amendment here in line 3, after the words "Robert A. Chapman and his associates," to this effect, "or other person or corporation duly authorized by the State of Alabama?"

Mr. THOMPSON. I would not; but it might retard the passage of this bill to such an extent as to defeat it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Not if it be granted by unanimous consent, I take it.

Mr. THOMPSON. I have no objection to that, except it might defeat the bill. It is a Senate bill.

Mr. BURTON. I would prefer that the gentleman himself would ask leave.

Mr. THOMPSON. If the gentleman will assist me in passing it through, I will do so.

Mr. BURTON. I think that would remove the objection.

Mr. THOMPSON. Very well; write out your amendment.

Mr. BURTON. "Or other person or corporation duly authorized by the State of Alabama."

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. THOMPSON. I will accept the amendment, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Those opposed to the bill have three minutes remaining.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Alabama to make a statement regarding the proposed amendment by the insertion of the words I have referred to.

Mr. THOMPSON. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment suggested by the gentleman be incorporated in the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the following amendment be incorporated in the bill. It will be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 3, page 1, after the word "associates," insert, "or other persons or corporations duly authorized thereto."

Mr. MADDOX. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia objects. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill with the committee amendments.

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that, in his opinion, two-thirds had not voted in the affirmative.

Mr. THOMPSON. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 68, noes 47.

Mr. THOMPSON. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were refused; 16 members seconding the demand.

Accordingly (two-thirds not voting in the affirmative) the motion was rejected.

GROSSE ISLE, DETROIT RIVER, MICHIGAN.

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 1905) for the erection of a keeper's dwelling at Grosse Isle, North Channel Range, Detroit River, Michigan.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman calls up, under suspension of the rules, the following bill, and moves its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $3,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the erection of a keeper's dwelling at Grosse Isle, North Channel Range, Detroit River, Michigan.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, is this unanimously reported by any committee?

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. What committee has reported it?

Mr. HENRY C. SMITH. Interstate and Foreign Commerce. It is for a light-house keeper's dwelling.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I am informed there is no objection to it.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and two-thirds voting in the affirmative, the rules were suspended and the bill passed.

RAILROAD BRIDGE ACROSS TENNESSEE RIVER, ALABAMA.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 17052) to authorize the building of a railroad bridge across the Tennessee River at a point between Lewis Bluff, in Morgan County, Ala., and Guntersville, in Marshall County, Ala.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama moves to suspend the rules and pass a bill which will be reported by the Clerk.

The bill was read. It provides that it shall be lawful for Milton Humes, R. E. Spragins, R. E. Pettus, T. W. Pratt, and Lawrence Cooper, their associates and assigns, to construct and maintain a bridge and approaches thereto over the Tennessee River at a point on said river between Lewis Bluff, in the county of Morgan, State of Alabama, and Guntersville, in the county of Marshall, State of Alabama, and to lay on or over said bridge a railroad track or tracks for the more perfect connection of any railroad or railroads that are or shall hereafter be constructed to the said river, on either or both sides thereof, at or opposite said point, under the limitations and conditions hereinafter provided. Said bridge shall be constructed to provide for the passage of railway trains, and, at the option of the owners or builders thereof, may be used for the passage of wagons or vehicles of all kinds, for the transit of animals of all kinds, and for foot passengers, for such reasonable rates of toll as may be approved from time to time by the Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill with the amendments.

The question being taken, and two-thirds voting in the affirmative, the rules were suspended and the bill passed.

LIGHT-HOUSE, ETC., WASHINGTON.

Mr. CUSHMAN. I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 75) to establish a light-house and fog signal at Burrows Island, Rosario Strait, State of Washington.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a light-house and fog signal be established and constructed at the southwest point of Burrows Island, Rosario Strait, Puget Sound, State of Washington, at a cost not to exceed $15,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I happened to notice the title of that bill. It is a House bill. There was a Senate bill favorably reported from our committee for the same purpose. I would ask the gentleman why he does not move to suspend the rules and pass the Senate bill?

Mr. CUSHMAN. I will say to the gentleman, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I ask that a second be ordered before the debate proceeds on this bill.

The SPEAKER. Debate has been running for some time.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I understood the gentleman from Illinois to rise and address a question to the Chair. I do not think I ought to be cut off from demanding a second.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will not be cut off, if he did not know the condition of things. The gentleman from Tennessee demands a second.

Mr. CUSHMAN. I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington is recognized for twenty minutes in favor of the bill and the gentleman from Tennessee for twenty minutes against the bill.

Mr. CUSHMAN. Mr. Speaker, the proposition contemplated by this bill, H. R. 75, is the construction of a light-house on Burrows Island, Rosario Strait, Puget Sound, in the State of Washington. The construction of a light-house at this point is one of the absolute necessities of the commerce of this region.

The Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, to whom this bill was referred for consideration, have made the following report on the same:

[House Report No. 419, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session.]

LIGHT-HOUSE AND FOG SIGNAL, BURROWS ISLAND, WASHINGTON.

February 5, 1902, committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed. Mr. COOMBS, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, submitted the following report (to accompany H. R. 75):

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 75) to establish a light-house and fog signal at Burrows Island, Rosario Strait, State of Washington, beg leave to submit the following report and recommend that said bill do pass without amendment:

This is a bill enacting that a light-house and fog signal be established and constructed at the southwest point of Burrows Island, Rosario Strait, Puget Sound, State of Washington, at a cost not to exceed $15,000.

This bill has the approval of the Treasury Department, as will be seen by the following letter:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY.
Washington, December 28, 1901.

SIR: This Department has the honor to acknowledge the receipt of a letter from your committee, dated December 26, 1901, inclosing for suggestions a copy of H. R. 75, authorizing the establishment of a light and fog-signal station at Burrows Island, Rosario Strait, Washington.

In reply the Department states that the matter was referred to the Light-House Board, which reports that the following recommendation made in its annual reports for the last four years is renewed on page 209 of its annual report for 1901:

"Burrows Island, Rosario Strait, Washington.—The following recommendation, made in the Board's last four annual reports, is renewed:

"'There is much traffic through Rosario Strait, which will naturally increase in the future. During certain seasons of the year fog and smoke from forests fires prevail. Burrows Island is a point of departure for most of the vessels plying the strait. The tides and currents here are strong and variable, and there are several dangerous reefs in the immediate vicinity. A light and fog signal at the southwest point of Burrows Island would be of great use to commerce and navigation. It is estimated that they could be established for not exceeding $15,000, and it is recommended that an appropriation of this amount be made therefor.'"

This Department therefore has the honor to state that it concurs with the Board in this recommendation.

Respectfully,

L. J. GAGE,
Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE,
House of Representatives.

You will observe that this bill not only has been favorably reported by the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, but the Light-House Board has been recommending for the past four years that this light-house be built.

I have here in my hand numerous petitions and memorials from commercial clubs and shipping men asking that this light-house be constructed at once. I call the attention of this House to the following letter addressed to me on this subject from the Commercial Club of Anacortes, State of Washington, said city being near the site of the proposed light:

ANACORTES COMMERCIAL CLUB,
Anacortes, Wash., January 15, 1903.

Hon. FRANCIS W. CUSHMAN, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: About five years ago there was circulated upon Puget Sound a petition praying Congress to make an appropriation for and have erected a light-house and fog-signal station upon the western end of Burrows Island in Rosario Straits in Puget Sound. This petition was unanimously signed by masters and shipowners, and some action was taken thereon, one House having passed the bill providing therefor.

This measure has recently been very forcibly brought to our attention by the running ashore of the passenger steamer Utopia and her almost miraculous escape from great injury—possibly complete destruction; also that of the tug Wigwam, flagship for the Alaska Packers' Association, and the exceedingly narrow escape from a serious wreck of the steamship City of Puebla. The diversity of tides and currents in this vicinity, caused by the numerous converging channels, makes navigation in the night or during fog extremely hazardous. This will be more patent to you by a casual examination of chart of United States Geological Survey No. 6300.

If deemed necessary a new petition for this most desirable aid for navigation could be promptly secured containing the signatures of every liscensed master, engineer, and shipowner on Puget Sound, and we would suggest that the Navy and War Departments would most willingly assist, as the frequent visits of war vessels and other United States crafts would move them to take an active interest in this matter.

Hoping this will meet with your earnest approval and secure your valuable aid for its immediate authorization, we beg to remain,

Your obedient servants,

ANACORTES COMMERCIAL CLUB,
WILL A. LOWMAN,
CHAS. C. MATHEWS,
Committee.

You will observe that letter mentions one passenger steamer going ashore, and the narrow escape from destruction of two more boats, all for the lack of a cheap light at this place.

I also insert here with my remarks a letter from C. W. Cook, of Tacoma, State of Washington, the manager of the Western Steam Navigation Company, showing the necessity for a light-house at this place:

WESTERN STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY,
THE VANCOUVER LINE,
Tacoma, Wash., January 19, 1903.

Hon. FRANCIS W. CUSHMAN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Sometime ago there was a petition circulated asking Congress for a light-house and fog signal on the western end of Burrows Island, in Puget Sound. Some action was taken on this petition, but it has not resulted in anything being done.

I beg to impress it on you that the tides and currents in the waters adjacent to Burrows Island are very strong, and there is a long stretch between the Port Wilson fog signal and Burrows Island, and no matter how much care is exercised a vessel is likely to come to grief in case of fog or heavy rain such as we have in this section of the country. It is impossible to avoid the dangers of this place by steering a compass course, by reason of the strength of the currents above mentioned. I understand that every representative of the shipping interests on the sound will address you with regard to this, and we beg to assure you anything you can do toward getting this light-house and fog signal established will be greatly appreciated.

Yours, faithfully,

C. W. COOK, Manager.

I also insert here with my remarks a letter recently received by me from Hon. Walter Oakes, treasurer of the Alaska Steamship Company and of the Puget Sound Navigation Company:

ALASKA STEAMSHIP COMPANY,
PUGET SOUND NAVIGATION COMPANY,
Seattle, Wash., January 26, 1903.

Hon. FRANCIS W. CUSHMAN,
United States House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Referring to attached letter to us, will say that the light-house in question should by all means be erected, as it is necessary for the safety of Puget Sound shipping.

I trust you will assist in any way possible and have it included in the list of Puget Sound light-house appropriations.

Yours, truly,

WALTER OAKES, Treasurer.

All of these letters and reports show the absolute necessity for the immediate construction of this light-house. The cost of the proposed light-house is $15,000.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman if there is not a Senate bill upon this same matter?

Mr. CUSHMAN. There is.

Mr. MANN. That our committee has reported?

Mr. CUSHMAN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Would it not be better to call up the Senate bill at this time instead of the House bill?

Mr. CUSHMAN. I thank the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] for his suggestion. I will endeavor very briefly to explain to the House the difference between the House bill and the Senate bill, and at the close of my explanation I will ask unanimous consent to substitute the Senate bill for the House bill, and ask consideration on the Senate bill.

The explanation in brief of this matter is as follows: One of the rules of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of this House (which is the committee to whom all light-house bills are referred for reports thereon) is that every House bill which is submitted to their committee must be in such form that it simply authorizes the construction of the light-house and fixes the limit of cost, and that the bill shall not make any appropriation for the light-house. Now, then, after a bill passes which simply authorizes the construction of a light-house and fixes the limit of cost, another committee of this House, the Appropriations Committee, makes the appropriation for the construction of the light-house by inserting a clause therefor in the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Now, then, in the United States Senate, a lawmaking body not governed by any special rules save "Senatorial courtesy," they are in a habit of passing light-house bills which not only authorize the construction, but make a definite appropriation for the project.

I introduced my bill here in the House in proper form as required by the rules of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, and according to the long practice in this House. My House bill was reported for me by that committee and placed upon the Calendar of the House.

In the meantime there had been introduced in the United States Senate a Senate bill (S. 265) providing for the erection of this same light-house and making a $15,000 appropriation therefor. That bill passed the Senate and came over to the House. In order that nothing should be neglected in this matter (for the building of this light-house is a very urgent matter) I prepared and had adopted a favorable report on the Senate bill, and had that also placed on the House Calendar.

Now, then, both of these bills are on the House Calendar. The bills are identical for all practical purposes. Each one provides for the building of a light-house on Burrows Island, Rosario Strait, in Puget Sound, State of Washington, at a cost of $15,000.

The reason that I now wish to substitute the Senate bill and have it considered is that that bill having been passed by the Senate, when we pass it in the House that will, as far as the legislative branch of the Government is concerned, enact the bill into law. But if we pass the House bill we will have one bill passed at the Senate end and another bill passed at the House end, and though both bills relate to precisely the same subject, when we get through we will not have any complete legislation. For these reasons I wish now to consider the Senate bill.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute in place of H. R. 75 Senate bill 265, which I now send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to substitute for the House bill the Senate bill, substantially the same, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 265) to establish a light-house and fog-signal station on Burrows Island, State of Washington.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection the Senate bill will be substituted. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I shall not object to the substitution, as the session is so near a close. I think the rule of the House committee is a very proper one, and ought to be adhered to except in extreme cases, otherwise you can not keep track of your appropriations, which is a very desirable thing to do. But with only two weeks of the session remaining, I for one shall not object.

Mr. CUSHMAN. I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and in the opinion of the Chair two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the similar House bill will lie on the table.

There was no objection.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT JACKSONVILLE, FLA.

Mr. DAVIS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, I move to suspend the rules and pass the Senate resolution which I send to the desk, with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. R. 108) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase additional ground for the post-office, court-house, and custom-house at Jacksonville, Fla.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That of the sum authorized to be expended in enlarging and improving the post-office, court-house, and custom-house at Jacksonville, Fla., the Secretary of the Treasury may, in his discretion, use not to exceed $45,000 for the purchase of additional ground: Provided, That such additional ground shall be contiguous to the present site and shall have a frontage on Forsyth and Adams streets of not less than 50 feet and a depth of not less than 208 feet.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I should like to inquire of the gentleman whether this bill comes from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of this House?

Mr. DAVIS of Florida. Yes, sir; with a unanimous report.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the joint resolution.

The question was taken; and in the opinion of the Chair two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

PATENT TO BUFFALO, WYO., FOR CERTAIN TRACTS OF LAND.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I am authorized by the Committee on the Public Lands to move to suspend the rules and pass the bill H. R. 17192.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 17192) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue a patent to the city of Buffalo, Wyo., for certain tracts of land.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue a patent to the city of Buffalo, Wyo., for lots 7 and 8, section 3, township 50 north, range 82 west, of the sixth principal meridian, embraced within the abandoned Fort McKinney Military Reservation, upon the payment by the authorities of said town of the appraised price of said lots.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second on that bill.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Wyoming is recognized for and the gentleman from Georgia against the bill.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, this bill proposes to sell 53 acres of land lying adjacent to the city of Buffalo, Wyo., at the price for which the land was appraised by the Secretary of the Interior. The land has to be sold, because subsequent to the appraisal the Interior Department held up the survey of a portion of the land included in the reservation, and temporarily the sale of the land is suspended. The town wishes these lands for cemetery purposes, and a considerable portion of the 53 acres is now occupied for cemetery purposes.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BARTLETT. Do I understand the gentleman to say that this bill has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Public Lands?

Mr. MONDELL. It is unanimously reported by the Committee on Public Lands, and recommended by the Secretary of the Interior.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and in the opinion of the Chair two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

LIGHT-HOUSE, BOSTON HARBOR.

Mr. CONRY. Mr. Speaker, I move the suspension of the rules and the passage of the bill (H. R. 16727) for the erection of a light-house in Boston Harbor, with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Broad Sound Channel light station, Boston Harbor, Massachusetts: For constructing a first-order light and fog signal at The Graves on a granite tower, to mark the entrance to the new Broad Sound Channel in Boston Harbor, $75,000; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to enter into a contract for the construction of said light station at a total cost not exceeding $183,000.

The following committee amendment was read:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the Light-House Board be authorized to change the location of Broad Sound Channel light at the entrance to Broad Sound Channel in Boston Harbor to such point or location in that vicinity as in their judgment shall be practicable and safe."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the suspension of the rules and the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and in the opinion of the Chair two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

CONFIRMING CERTAIN FOREST LIEU SELECTIONS.

Mr. EDDY. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill H. R. 15985, to confirm certain forest lieu selections made under the act approved June 4, 1897.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all bona fide selections under the act approved June 4, 1897 (30 Stats., 36), of lands in Montana which lie within the territory opened to entry under the provisions of the act approved May 1, 1888, chapter 213 (25 Stats., 113-133), entitled "An act to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Gros Ventre, Piegan, Blood, Blackfeet, and River Crow Indians in Montana, and for other purposes," made prior to the decision of the Commissioner of the General Land Office dated October 20, 1902, in the case of George L. Ramsey, holding that such lands are subject to disposal only under the forms of entry provided by the said act of May 1, 1888, be, and the same are hereby, confirmed, no other valid objection to the acceptance of such selections appearing.

The following committee amendment was read:

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to confirm certain forest lieu selections made under the act approved June 4, 1897."

The question was taken; and in the opinion of the Chair two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

OPENING FOR SETTLEMENT CERTAIN LANDS IN OKLAHOMA.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Indian Affairs, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 16280), to open for settlement 505,000 acres of land in the Kiowa, Comanche, and the Apache Indian reservations, in Oklahoma Territory, with committee amendments.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Whereas on the 6th day of October, A. D. 1892, the Comanche, Kiowa, and Apache tribes of Indians in Oklahoma Territory made a treaty with the United States, which treaty was duly ratified by Congress on June 6, 1900; and

Whereas it was stipulated in said treaty that each Indian in said tribes should have allotted to them 160 acres of land, and that the remainder of their reservation should be thrown open to settlement on the payment by the United States to them of $1.25 per acre; and

Whereas the Secretary of the Interior set apart 25,000 acres of land out of said reservation for a wood reservation; and

Whereas said act of Congress of June 6, 1900, set apart 480,000 acres of grazing land out of said reservation for grazing purposes, said grazing lands to be selected and set apart for them by the Secretary of the Interior; and

Whereas Congress has the right and it is its duty to sell the farming lands in said reservation not allotted to Indians to persons desiring homesteads on farming lands: Now, therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That all of that part of article 3 of section 6 of the act of Congress of date June 6, 1900, entitled "An act to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Indians of the Fort Hall Indian Reservation, in Idaho," and making appropriations to carry the same into effect, which reads as follows, to wit: "That in addition to the allotment of land to said Indians as provided for in this agreement the Secretary of the Interior shall set aside for the use in common for said Indian tribes 480,000 acres of grazing lands, to be selected by the Secretary of the Interior, either in one or more tracts, as will best subserve the interests of said Indians," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

SEC. 2. That the 480,000 acres of lands set apart in the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indian reservations in Oklahoma Territory by the Secretary of the Interior, referred to and mentioned in section 1 of this act, and the 25,000 acres of lands set apart as a wood reservation in the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indian reservations in Oklahoma Territory by Secretary of the Interior, referred to and mentioned in the preamble of this act, shall be opened to settlement by proclamation of the President of the United States within three months from the passage of this act and be disposed of at public auction to the highest bidder for cash: Provided, That no one person shall be permitted to purchase more than 160 acres, under the rules and regulations adopted by the Secretary of the Interior: And provided further, That the money arising from the sale of said lands shall be paid to said Indians in the same manner as was provided in the said act of June 6, 1900.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on Indian Affairs, were read:

Strike out the preamble. In lines 4 and 5 strike out the words "referred to and mentioned in the preamble of this act." In line 15, after the word "hundred," insert the following:

"And it is also provided, That such sales shall be subject to any leases made for agricultural purposes prior to the passage of this act, the rentals accruing after such sale to belong to the purchasers under this act."

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I ask that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, this bill throws open for settlement 500,005 acres of land in the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indian reservations, in Oklahoma. In 1892 an agreement was entered into between these tribes of Indians and the United States by which the Indians were to have allotted to each member of these tribes 160 acres of land. The rest of their reservation was to be thrown open for settlement. That treaty was ratified June 6, 1900, by an act of Congress. Four hundred and eighty thousand acres was reserved by an amendment put on the bill in the Senate for the use of the Indians for the purpose of grazing their stock, and 25,000 for a timber reserve, making 500,005 in all. The Secretary of the Interior had the right to locate this pasture land. Four hundred thousand acres of it was located fronting Red River, and nearly all of it was good agricultural land, and the people of the surrounding country desire this land to be open for the purpose of settlement. It is worth a great deal more for agricultural than for pasturage purposes.

The bill opening all these reservations has passed the House two or three times in different forms, and the Senate's amendment, reserving the pasture lands, is the reason why this bill should be now passed—so that these lands may go into the hands of actual settlers.

The first bill introduced by me provided for the opening of the land for settlement under the United States land laws. That, in my opinion, was the correct way in which it should have been opened, but during the last session of this Congress the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] objected to the passage of the bill and it failed of engrossment. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] voted with the majority and entered a motion to reconsider.

I introduced this bill to avoid the objections of the gentleman who opposed that bill. This bill provides for a sale of the land at auction in 160-acre tracts. It also provides that no one man shall purchase more than 160 acres. The proceeds of the land are to be paid by the Secretary of the Interior directly to the Indians.

It was believed by the gentleman from Illinois and others who opposed my first bill, which was a homestead measure, that the Indians were entitled to all that the land would bring upon the open market. They, therefore, desired a public sale of the land.

I will state further that these Indians are wards of the Government, and that we are making annual appropriations for their support, and if this land is sold and the proceeds turned into the Treasury it will take them out of the care of the Government, and we will not have to support them any longer. There are between 2,500 and 3,000 of the Indians, and stopping these annual payments will be quite a saving to the Government, as no appropriations will have to be made for them in the future. Therefore I hope the bill will pass in its present form. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balane of my time.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, if I can have the attention of the House for about five minutes I think I can point out several reasons why this bill should not pass. In the first place, Mr. Speaker, it does not provide for the opening to settlement of 505,000 acres of land, but provides for the selling to the highest bidder of 505,000 acres of the public domain. The Committee on Indian Affairs have reported that the land belongs to the Indians. I maintain, Mr. Speaker, the lands do not belong to the Indians; that if they do belong to the Indians, they should not be taken from them or disposed of without some treaty first having been made with these Indians. Then, if the lands do belong to the Indians and are to be ceded to the Government, they should be disposed of under the public-land laws of the United States and not sold at public auction to the highest bidder, or in any other manner.

Mr. Speaker, in 1892 a treaty was made with the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indians by which it was provided that they cede, convey, transfer, relinquish forever and absolutely, without any reservation whatever, expressed or implied, all their claim, title, and interest of any kind and character in and to the lands that it is now proposed, as the gentleman says, to open to settlement. I read from the treaty. It provided, Mr. Speaker, that each and every Indian should first be permitted to take an allotment of 160 acres, 80 acres to be agricultural land and 80 acres grazing land. Now, that was a liberal provision, for the reason that in allowing the Indians to take allotments it is unusual to give children as much as you give to the heads of families. For instance, the head of a family may have 160 acres, a single man 80 acres, and a child 40 acres. But this treaty provided that each Indian should have 160 acres, 80 acres of which should be grazing land.

When that treaty was ratified by Congress, Congress of its own motion amended the treaty without any agreement with the Indians, without any application or petition from them to amend it, and simply provided that out of their lands 480,000 acres should be reserved—for what purpose? Simply for the use of the Indians for pasturage purposes—that they might use it to range their stock upon it. And the treaty was further amended so as to permit the Indians to take their allotments of 160 acres each, without regard to the character of the land and without being required to take at least 80 acres for grazing purposes. The treaty provided, further, that we should pay to these Indians the sum of $2,000,000, $500,000 in cash and $1,500,000 to be paid into the Treasury to their credit, upon which 5 per cent was to be paid annually to the Indians.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, we paid the Indians for 480,000 acres $500,000 in cash, and $1,500,000 paid into the Treasury. And now they propose to take those 480,000 acres and sell it at public auction to the highest bidder and pay the proceeds to the Indians, without even providing that the Government shall be reimbursed for the $1.25 per acre that we have already paid these Indians. Now, Mr. Speaker, 25,000 acres of the lands mentioned in this bill were set aside by the Secretary of the Interior without any authority of Congress; without any provision in the treaty or the bill setting it aside—were set aside for a wood reservation in order that the Indians might have some place where they could go to get fuel. But, Mr. Speaker, that was also a portion of the lands for which we had paid the Indians $1.25 an acre.

Now, we propose to sell those 25,000 acres, in addition to the 480,000, for the most we can get for them, without even a requirement of citizenship on the part of the purchaser, saying nothing about the homestead requirements. The only reservation that there is in the bill is that no one purchaser shall be allowed to purchase more than 160 acres. Why, Mr. Speaker, how easy it would be for one man to purchase 100 times 160 acres if he so desired. He would simply get his stool pigeons to each buy 160 acres and immediately convey it to him.

In addition to paying these Indians $500,000 in cash and putting into the Treasury $1,500,000, Congress, in 1900, the same year in which we ratified the treaty and paid these Indians $500,000 in cash, gave them a gratuity of $75,000; and every Congress since that, including the present Congress, has provided in the Indian appropriation bill not less than $35,000 (except one year, when it was $25,000), and sometimes going as high as $75,000, for these Indians to whom we paid $2,000,000. And now it is proposed to sell 505,000 acres, for which we have already paid them, and give them the proceeds.

I think, Mr. Speaker, we have come to a point where these Indians have been treated in such a way that we ought not at least to give them the proceeds of the 505,000 acres sold at public auction to the highest bidder, and for which we have already paid them, without any requirement of settlement or cultivation and without even the requirement of citizenship.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I now yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY].

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, the argument made by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] might have had some force in connection with the original opening of the Kiowa and Comanche lands. That question was fought out then. We bought that land then for about one dollar an acre. The Senate thought we were not giving the Indians a square deal. In order to make the arrangement a fair one for the Indians, these 480,000 acres were reserved. That land has been conceded now to the Indians by act of Congress. Who says we should take that back, that that act ought not to have been passed? It has been passed. The title belongs to the Indians. That property to-day is surrounded by the homes of the men who bought the Kiowa and Comanche lands; and every acre of the land for which we paid $1 an acre has been taken up by settlers.

Now, there are 505,000 acres of land still remaining, which will make homes for about 3,200 families. They are willing to go in there and buy this land. The land belongs to the Indians. It is surrounded by farms, and it ought to be sold for whatever it will fairly bring in the market. The only limitation we place upon it is that they can sell only one tract of 160 acres to one individual; but this land belongs to the Indians; it is their property, and they should have the right to sell it.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LACEY. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Is it not true that in the treaty of 1892 they ceded all their right, title, and claims, as I stated?

Mr. LACEY. Well, I will not discuss that. It is immaterial whether it is true or not. Congress did not stand by the cession, but took the balance of the land, which to-day is worth at least from six to eight dollars an acre, which is all occupied, and which has been laid out in towns and farms, and gave back to them 480,000 acres as a part of that transaction. We are not Indians; we can not "take back a gift." The proposition of the gentleman now is to confiscate what was given to them by act of Congress. It is their property and they have a right to all it will bring. We put a limitation in this bill, as I state, which restricts any one man from buying more than one-quarter section. Otherwise, let the land bring what it will; let it be thrown open for settlement.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LACEY. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman explain how the Indians can possibly have any title to the wood reservation?

Mr. LACEY. That has been reserved just as the other property has.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. By what authority?

Mr. LACEY. By act of Congress.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. What act of Congress?

Mr. LACEY. The act of Congress ratified—reserved this land and opened the balance. Now, the gentleman would prefer the settlers to go to South Dakota. We want to open up this additional land, and the gentleman should not stand in the way and block the settlement in Oklahoma in order to keep out those 3,200 families. [Applause.]

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LACEY. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I hold in my hand the act of Congress to which the gentleman referred, and I would like him to point out wherein the 25,000 acres are reserved, or any authority given to anyone to reserve them.

Mr. LACEY. The 25,000-acre tract is a wood reserve. That was reserved for the purpose of allowing the Indians to get timber. Four hundred and eighty thousand acres are reserved as a pasturage. It is all valuable agricultural land. It is to-day all in a state of reservation, it is all to-day occupied by Indians, and Congress, as the guardian of the Indians, ought to see to it that this property brings all it is fairly worth.

There is no better way to ascertain what property is fairly worth than to allow it to be sold in the open market. This country will be settled—it will be occupied within twenty-four hours after the opening. There will be the same demand for this land that there was for the adjoining Kiowa and Comanche lands, and we should not stand here as dogs in the manger and keep this property closed to settlers, when the Indians are entirely willing that the property should be entirely disposed of. I hope this bill will pass. It was unanimously reported by the committee, with the exception of my friend from South Dakota. His idea was that we were giving too much to the Indians, that they were overreaching the white man. Mr. Speaker, the instances where the red man has overreached his white brother are so few that it is hardly worth while for us to exercise ourselves very much about it at this late day. This land now does not belong to us; it belongs to the wards of Congress.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman answer a question?

Mr. LACEY. Certainly.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I would like to ask the gentleman if there has been any petition or any application from these Indians, if they do own this land, that it be sold, and is there any report from the Secretary of the Interior or any other department asking this legislation?

Mr. LACEY. There is not. Their rights here are fully taken care of in this matter. There will be no trouble about that. No objection has been heard. This bill has been on the Calendar a long time, it has been pending a long time, and no objection made to it.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield for just one further question?

Mr. LACEY. Very well.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The gentleman states that this bill has been on the Calendar some time. Is it not a fact that it was reported to this House less than a week ago?

Mr. LACEY. I do not remember the date. It has been on the Calendar some time.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. It was ordered reported on the 7th and, I think, reported on the 10th.

Mr. LACEY. It was held back from the Calendar about a week in order to give the gentleman from South Dakota opportunity to file a minority report.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The committee met on Thursday, and the gentleman filed his report on Saturday. Mr. Speaker, I want to say just a word further. I believe I have some time remaining.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has ten minutes remaining.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I want to impress upon the House the fact that if this land does belong to the Indians you dispose of it without any treaty whatever with the Indians.

I want to say, further, that when the treaty was ratified by Congress the amendment was suggested by the Interior Department, and this reservation of 480,000 acres was made by the Secretary of the Interior under the authority given in that amended treaty. The 25,000 acres was reserved upon the motion of the Secretary, without any authority of law whatever, and the Department so far has not been heard from in favor of this bill, which was introduced in the House on February 7, considered at the meeting of the Committee on Indian Affairs a week ago last Thursday, and reported on the following Saturday without a word from the Department asking for this legislation.

I yield such time as I have remaining to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], if he desires it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, investigation convinces me that this bill should not pass in its present form. I was present at the meeting of the Committee on Indian Affairs when the bill was under consideration, and at that time did not have the information about it which I now possess.

There is one feature of this bill in particular which should receive careful consideration from the House. It is provided in the bill that this land shall be sold at auction to the highest bidder, but that no one person shall be permitted to purchase more than 160 acres. All of the Fort Hall Reservation, with the exception of these 505,000 acres, was opened for settlement under the homestead laws. I am strongly of the opinion that there are many persons who desire to secure great blocks of this land, no matter what the price; and while no one person can purchase at the sale more than 160 acres of land, there is nothing in the law which will prevent any person or combination of persons from having as much land as is desired bid in by representatives, and afterwards by transfers secure control of great blocks of this land.

This, Mr. Speaker, is the first time in my experience that the Committee on Indian Affairs has ever reported a bill which has not been reported upon by the Department of the Interior. When the bill was up for consideration I was under the impression that there was before the committee a report from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. In that I was mistaken. The passage of this bill is not asked by the Indians themselves, neither is it urged by the Department. In my opinion the Indians have been fully paid for this land, and while I believe that Congress has the right, irrespective of the desire of the Indians, to determine that their lands shall be sold without treaty with the Indians regarding it, this particular land, in my opinion, should not be sold without full investigation by the Department regarding the conditions under which it is proposed to be sold. It has been said this land will bring from $25 to $30 an acre.

The Government has paid to the Indians about $1.25 an acre for it. It has paid the Indians about $613,000 for the land embraced within this bill, and if this bill be passed and the land sold at public auction, the Indians will receive several millions of dollars in addition, and the Government will not even be reimbursed for the expenditure already made. In my opinion the bill should not be passed unless the land, when sold, is sold only to persons who intend to take homesteads upon it. No one person or combination of persons should be permitted to secure, by any method, immense tracts of this very valuable and desirable land.

I yield back whatever time is remaining to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE.]

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print as a part of my remarks in the Beaumont matter the minority views which I filed to-day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent that he may publish the minority report in the Beaumont matter, which was up to-day, with his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY].

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York says that this land is worth $25 an acre, and therefore we should take it away from the Indians. That is hardly in keeping with the generous character of his action heretofore in relation to Indian matters.

I read from the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Lone Wolf case. The court holds that Congress can legislate as to its Indian wards without a treaty. Justice White in that opinion quotes from the statute as follows:

> That in addition to the allotment of lands to said Indians as provided for in this agreement, the Secretary of the Interior shall set aside for the use in common for said Indian tribes 480,000 acres of grazing lands, to be selected by the Secretary of the Interior, either in one or more tracts as will best subserve the interest of said Indians.

This land was set apart to them by act of Congress. It is a late day for us now to say that that land is worth $25 an acre and that we did not give it to them by that act of Congress, which expressly set it apart to them.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Did not the gentleman himself state in the committee that this land would bring about $25 an acre?

Mr. LACEY. Oh, no; I said some of the land was, perhaps, worth that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman said expressly that it would bring that.

Mr. LACEY. If it brings that, so much the worse for the gentleman's position. He says it should be taken away from the Indians and given to somebody for homesteads. Certainly the two propositions of the gentleman do not hang together very well—that the land is worth $25 an acre, and that therefore it should be given to the white man for homestead purposes free of charge.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I did not make that statement.

Mr. LACEY. What statement?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That it should be given away for homestead purposes.

Mr. LACEY. Well, the gentleman said it should be opened under the homestead act, as I understood him.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I said that any person purchasing should be compelled to comply with the homestead act, so that he could not dispose of it immediately to some one who wanted to secure great tracts. In other words, the question is whether you shall allow the Indians to open up these lands in such a manner as to make the Indians get the best or lowest possible sum for the lands. There is no trouble about that land being devoted to farming.

Indian lands in Kansas were sold years ago under a similar law to this, and every foot of it is occupied by homes of farmers in that community. There is no danger of these rich agricultural lands being gathered together in large tracts for ranches. This land is not of that character. It is cotton land, it is wheat land, it is corn land. A farmer can make a living upon 160 acres of such land. The land ought to be sold. It ought to be opened for settlement, and ought to be occupied. It belongs to the Indians, and as their guardians we have the right to open it in a fair way that will give the Indians a just price for their land, and to deny it is to allow it to stand there blocking the growth of that country. I yield back my time to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I ask for a vote.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I yield the four minutes remaining to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON].

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that it would be a grave mistake for the House to pass the bill under the circumstances detailed. It appears there is no request whatever for this action from the Indian tribes and no recommendation from the Secretary of the Interior. It is asserted here that this tract of land of 480,000 acres does not belong to the Indians at all. It is apparent from a very cursory reading of the treaty that the 25,000 acres of timber land do not belong to them, for this part is not even mentioned in it. There is no reservation of any right to the Indians. Now, under these circumstances it would seem that we are asked to force the proceeds of these 505,000 acres of land upon these Indians against their will. There has already been paid to them, or deposited in the Treasury to their credit, $2,000.000, which is two-thirds of a thousand dollars apiece; and now, whether this land is worth $25 or $1.25 an acre, it would be extravagant and hurtful to them, as well as wasteful, for the Government to give them more.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I would like to ask you how would you start to open this country? It is very desirable that it should be done.

Mr. BURTON. In reply I will state to the gentleman that some evenings since I had a conversation with an Army officer who is a friend of these Indians. He insisted that we should not take away the wood reservation. He believed that the wood reservation should be retained and the pasturage as well. Now, you propose to sell both and take them from the Indians.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. These Indians are on the Red River, over 20 miles away. They have taken their allotment where there is some timber.

Mr. BURTON. Twenty miles is not a very long way for an Indian.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman if he does not realize that it would be better for the Indians to have these lands sold at the price, or approximately the price, or half of the price that is suggested is the value of it and to get the ordinary interest upon that money than for them to retain it and to use it for grazing or leasing it?

Mr. BURTON. I can not give an answer to that question in a moment. I dwelt on that at considerable length two weeks ago.

Mr. SLAYDEN. It is a well-recognized fact that when lands in the grazing country get over a certain value, say $2 or $3 an acre, they cease to be profitable for ordinary range uses, as they are called in the West; that is, for breeding and raising cattle on indigenous grasses.

Mr. BURTON. I do not realy see how that affects this question. The question in my mind here is whether this land belongs to these Indians at all. They have already received $2,000,000 for their land. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER. The time for debate having expired, the question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that two-thirds have not voted for the bill.

Mr. LACEY and Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Division!

The House divided; and there were—ayes 35, noes 52.

So the House refused to pass the bill.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH GOVERNMENT LANDS ON BIG SANDY RIVER, WEST VIRGINIA.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill H. R. 16138, with amendments.

The bill as amended was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 16138) granting the right of way to the Kenova and Big Sandy Railroad Company through the Government lands at Lock No. 2, Big Sandy River, and at Lock No. 3, Big Sandy River, both in Wayne County, W. Va.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Kenova and Big Sandy Railroad Company, a corporation created under and by virtue of the law of the State of West Virginia, its successors and assigns, be, and the same are hereby, empowered to locate, construct, and maintain its railroad through the lands belonging to the United States Government at Lock No. 2, Big Sandy River, and at Lock No. 3, Big Sandy River, in Wayne County, in the State of West Virginia, under such conditions and upon such lines, and of such widths, as shall be determined and approved by the Secretary of War: Provided, That the said company shall pay to the United States such sum of money as the Secretary of War shall decide to be the value of the lands so occupied.

SEC. 2. That the right of way granted herein under the provisions contained in this act shall become inoperative and null and void unless the said company shall, within the term of two years from the 1st of January, 1903, have so far advanced the construction of said road as to satisfy the War Department that said company is lawfully and successfully established and that said road will be completed as proposed within a reasonable time.

SEC. 3. That if in the future, in the construction or operation by the United States of locks, dams, or other improvements to facilitate navigation on the Big Sandy River, or the tributaries thereof, it shall be necessary to utilize any land or other property of the said railroad company, the privilege shall be granted on such terms as shall be determined by the Secretary of War, and the said railroad company shall execute a valid agreement to that effect to be submitted to and approved by the said Secretary of War.

SEC. 4. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I demand a second.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I will say that this is a bill to give the Kenova and Big Sandy Railroad Company the right to pass through the property of Locks Nos. 2 and 3 on the Big Sandy River, and it in no way interferes with the locks. The Government at this point has considerable ground running back to the foot of the hill. The company asked in the original bill for 80 feet. The War Department amended it, and said that they would give them just such ground as they needed. They also suggested another amendment, which is in the bill, that the railroad company should pay to the Government a reasonable compensation, to be agreed upon by the Secretary of War and the railroad company, for this ground. As the bill is amended it gives them just such right of way as they absolutely need through the Government property at Locks 2 and 3 on the Big Sandy River. It in no way interferes with the lock system.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. What committee reported the bill?

Mr. HUGHES. It was reported by the River and Harbor Committee, and the committee authorized me to make this report.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Why do they want to use the land?

Mr. HUGHES. Because there is no other way of getting through without digging a tunnel. The Government owns all the bottom land.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. What railroad is it?

Mr. HUGHES. It is the Kenova and Big Sandy Railroad, which is a branch of the Norfolk and Western Railroad.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the suspension of the rules and the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and in the opinion of the Chair two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

SAN FRANCISCO MOUNTAINS FOREST RESERVE.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S.6968) granting the Central Arizona Railway Company a right of way for railroad purposes through the San Francisco Mountains Forest Reserve, in the Territory of Arizona.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That upon the conditions herein named the Central Arizona Railway Company, a corporation existing under the laws of the Territory of Arizona, is hereby granted a right of way, conformably to the act entitled "An act granting to railroads a right of way through the public lands of the United States," approved March 3, 1875, and the existing regulations adopted thereunder, over and through the San Francisco Mountains Forest Reserve, in the Territory of Arizona, for a line of railroad from a point at or near Flagstaff, in the county of Coconino, Territory of Arizona, in a southwesterly direction by the most practicable route to the town of Jerome, in the county of Yavapai, Territory of Arizona, and thence in a southeasterly direction to the town of Globe, in the county of Gila, Territory of Arizona, with the right to construct and maintain all necessary side tracks, extensions, switches, spurs, and water stations: Provided, That as a condition to obtaining such right of way the said company shall be required to agree, in writing, to conform to such further regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior for the purpose of protecting the said forest reserve and conserving the purposes for which the reserve was established and is maintained; but said company shall not be authorized to take or cut any timber within the limits of said forest reserve outside of its said right of way.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the suspension of the rules and the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and in the opinion of the Chair two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

EXTENSION OF COAL-LAND LAWS TO THE DISTRICT OF ALASKA.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 15946) to amend an act entitled "An act to extend the coal-land laws to the district of Alaska," approved June 6, 1900, with an amendment.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That an act entitled "An act to extend the coal-land laws to the district of Alaska," approved June 6, 1900, be, and the same hereby is, amended to read as follows, to wit:

"SECTION 1. That so much of the public-land laws of the United States are hereby extended to the district of Alaska as relate to coal lands, namely, sections 2347 to 2352, inclusive: Provided, That such lands, whether surveyed or unsurveyed, may be entered without reference to the limitation contained in the proviso to section 2401 of the Revised Statutes: And provided further, That the applicants shall only be required to show, so far as the discovery of coal is concerned, that it has been discovered on each 40 acres and each fractional part of 40 acres embraced in such application and survey.

"SEC. 2. That the reserved right of way, 60 feet in width, along the shore of navigable waters provided by existing law shall not be in any manner changed by this act; and no entry shall be allowed under this act extending more than 160 rods along the shore of any such navigable waters, and a space of at least 80 rods shall be reserved from entry between all such entries. If the land sought to be entered is unsurveyed, then it must be located in a rectangular form in tracts of 40, 80, or 160 acres, located by north and south lines according to the true meridian, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior. The location shall be marked upon the ground by permanent monuments at each of the four corners of said location, so that the boundaries of the same may be readily and easily traced; that the plat and application for said location shall within ninety days from the date thereof be filed for record in the recording district in which the land is situated. Said record shall contain the name of the applicant and a plat and description of the land applied for by reference to such natural object or permanent monument as will identify the same.

"SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe rules and regulations for the application, survey, and patenting of coal lands under this act."

The following committee amendment was read:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That any person or association of persons qualified to make entry under the coal-land laws of the United States who shall have opened and improved a coal mine or coal mines on the unsurveyed public lands in the district of Alaska, and who may desire to enter and purchase the same according to the provisions of the said coal-land laws before the extension of the public-land surveys over the lands on which such mines are located, shall file in the proper land office an application to enter the lands held and claimed by them, together with a plat and field notes of a survey of the same made under the direction of the surveyor-general of the district of Alaska, showing the boundaries of said tracts and their location as regards permanent natural landmarks or other surveys. All tracts shall be rectangular in form, containing 40, 80, or 160 acres, and distinctly marked by monuments on the ground, and the boundaries of the same shall be true east and west and north and south lines as nearly as practicable. Upon presentation of the said plat and field notes the application, if otherwise regular, shall be accepted as though the tracts sought to be entered were embraced within the regular public-land surveys.

"SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior shall make all necessary rules and regulations for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of this act."

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. LACEY. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, this is the unanimous report of the Committee on the Public Lands, after a great deal of time and investigation. The coal-land laws have been extended to Alaska, but they are inoperative because the surveys have not been made, and this bill is drawn so as to enable special surveys to be made. It is the same matter that was discussed when the sundry civil bill was up the other day. The necessity of the bill was presented thoroughly then by gentlemen of the committee. There was an increase in the amount of the appropriation for surveys with a view of aiding in the opening of Alaska. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LACEY. I will.

Mr. FINLEY. I would like to know what is the necessity for the passage of this act now in advance of the regular surveys?

Mr. LACEY. Because Alaska has 300,000,000 acres of land and the surveys are very costly. It is hard to get that land surveyed, and the small part of it where the coal lies can be surveyed by the provisions of this bill without incurring the expenditure of a general survey.

Mr. FINLEY. Do I understand that no coal lands will be taken up until after the Government has surveyed them?

Mr. LACEY. They can not be until there is a general survey under the present general law. Although the coal laws have been extended to Alaska they are inoperative because the land can not be taken, for the reason that it has not been surveyed.

Mr. FINLEY. You say the coal lands are limited in area. Will it not follow that persons will go in and take up all there is?

Mr. LACEY. When I said that they were small I meant limited in comparison with the great extent of Alaska; that is, they are perhaps three times the size of South Carolina; but the area of Alaska is so large that I spoke of them in comparison with that great area as small.

Mr. FINLEY. I understand that. I ask the gentleman, will not this legislation enable a few individuals, or a number of individuals, to go there and monopolize all the coal lands?

Mr. LACEY. I do not apprehend any danger of that kind. They must pay $10 an acre for the land——

Mr. FINLEY. Does not the gentleman think it would be wise——

Mr. LACEY. Under the law they will have to pay $10 an acre, and if it is within 15 miles of a railroad they will have to pay $20 an acre. So that there is no danger of monopolization. At present there is no opportunity to get it at all, and of course it can not be monopolized if you can not buy it at all.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill with committee amendments.

The question was taken; and in the opinion of the chair, two-thirds having voted in the affirmative, the rules were suspended and the bill as amended was passed.

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill H. R. 17046, the fortification appropriation bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman who makes this motion how long he intends to keep us here to consider an appropriation bill?

Mr. HEMENWAY. So far as I know, there will be no discussion upon the bill. There are only about 10 pages in the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Well, it is unusual to take up a general appropriation bill at 5 minutes after 5 o'clock.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I think there will be no discussion on the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It will take half an hour to read it.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Oh, no. I will state to the gentleman that there are only a few pages, and as it is near the close of the session I think we had better work until half after 5.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How much does the bill carry?

Mr. HEMENWAY. About $7,000,000.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. When was it reported?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Oh, it has been reported for ten days or more. It was reported January 26.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana, that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the fortification appropriation bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HEMENWAY) there were—ayes 51, noes 32.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum present.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, Mr. Speaker, as that point is raised, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, just a word. I want to ask the gentleman from Tennessee if he does not think that at this stage of the session, this being a short bill, we had better get it over to the Senate?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I think we might have taken it up earlier, instead of some other bills. It is now ten minutes after 5, and I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. A communication, in the nature of a petition, from Hinton Rowan Helper, praying for the appointment of a commission to examine into the feasibility of the construction of an intercontinental railway through North, Central, and South America, was, on February 10, reported from the Committee on Printing and printed as Senate Document No. 144, Fifty-seventh Congress, second session. TOWN SITES IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, I have a paper in the nature of a memorial, which I suppose may as well come in under the order of petitions.

The Senate will remember that pending the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill I offered an amendment to the town-site provision. Since then I have received the following paper, which I think had better be read and go in the RECORD, because I desire to file the paper itself with the Interior Department. It sheds light upon what is going on in the Indian Territory in this regard. The amendment scarcely seems to cover the case.

I ask the Secretary to read the communication and the Reporter to take it down, because I wish to withdraw the paper immediately afterwards and file it with the Interior Department.

Mr. ALDRICH. I did not understand the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania presents a memorial and asks that it may be read.

Mr. QUAY. It bears on the question of my amendment to the town-site provision in the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is a memorial from whom?

Mr. QUAY. It is from a Delaware Indian, or a citizen of the Cherokee Nation, named Bartles.

Mr. ALDRICH. Would it not answer the Senator's purpose to have it printed as a document?

Mr. QUAY. No; I think not. I should like to have it go into the RECORD so as to be used by the committee of conference on the Indian appropriation bill. We can not use the paper itself, because I wish to file it in the Interior Department.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think it is a bad precedent. I suggest that it be printed in the RECORD without reading.

Mr. QUAY. It is a matter probably of indifference, but I would rather that the Senate heard the paper.

Mr. ALDRICH. I withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the memorial.

The Secretary proceeded to read the memorial.

Mr. QUAY. The paper is longer than I had anticipated, and does not seem to be attracting much attention in the Senate. Therefore I have no objection to the rest of it going into the RECORD without reading. It need not be copied further than the signature of Mr. Bartles. The certificates of allotment and other papers attached need not go into the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the memorial will be printed in the RECORD. The Chair hears none.

The memorial is as follows:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Indian Territory, Western District:

I, J. H. Bartles, being first duly sworn, upon oath state:

That I am a citizen of the Cherokee Nation and duly enrolled as such; that I have resided in the Cherokee Nation continuously since the year 1875.

That in the month of May, 1898, I purchased the claims and improvements of the original Indian occupants of the lands embraced or proposed to be embraced in the town of Dewey, Ind. T., lying in secs. 20, 21, 28, and 29, T. 27 N., R. 13 E., and secured bills of sale of the same from George Hazelrig, Dennis Wilson and wife, Bell Wilson, J. H. Johnson and wife, Jenny Johnson, Andy Daniels, Frank Carr, and W. H. Shailer and his wife, Agnes Shailer; that the consideration for these bills of sale, actually paid in money, aggregated about $1,500, in addition to other valuable consideration, consisting of agreements upon my part that when I secured my allotment and got title to the land and was able to make valid conveyances of the same to them that I would give them certain lots and blocks in the town of Dewey.

That thereafter, to wit, on the 27th day of March, 1899, I made a written declaration that I had selected as an allotment for myself the E. ½ of the NE. ¼ of sec. 29, T. 27 N., R. 13 E., copy of which is hereto attached. My son, Joe A. Bartles, on the 27th day of March, 1899, made a written declaration that he had selected as an allotment for himself the N. ½ of the W. ½ of the NW. ¼ of sec. 28 and the W. ½ of the NE. ¼ of sec. 29, T. 27 N., R. 13 E., copies of which declarations are attached hereto.

Also, on the 27th day of March, 1899, my wife, Nannie M. Bartles, made a written declaration that she had selected as an allotment for herself the SE. ¼ of sec. 20, T. 27 N., R. 13 E., copy of which is attached hereto.

That thereafter I entered into contract with various persons whereby I allowed improvements to be erected upon various parts of the premises now proposed to be segregated as the town of Dewey, Ind. T., in which I agreed that as soon as I secured my allotment and got title to the land and could make valid conveyances I would convey to them the property called for in their several contracts, and that upon these contracts a number of persons have come to and settled in the settlement or town of Dewey, Ind. T.

That the land proposed to be segregated as a Government town site is marked and designated upon a plat, which is attached hereto and made a part of this affidavit.

That I have at all times stood ready to perform all of the stipulations and obligations contained in my said contracts with the persons whom I have granted permission to come upon said lands, and am still willing to abide by and conform to these said contracts.

That there are less than 200 inhabitants now residing in the settlement of Dewey, to wit, about 175 persons; that a majority of the residents of the said town of Dewey are still willing to abide by their agreements with me, and are not desirous of having a Government town site segregated at that place, as will appear from a petition that they have filed with the Dawes Commission for transmission to the Secretary of the Interior, protesting against the segregation of a Government town site at Dewey; that the signers of said protest embrace all of the property holders in the town of Dewey excepting two; that notwithstanding the facts above set out, I was advised about the middle of January, 1903, that application had been made by certain persons, some of whom resided within the town of Dewey and some of whom resided without the said town of Dewey, and not upon any part of the lands proposed to be segregated, petitioned the honorable Indian inspector, asking that a Government town site be segregated at Dewey, and surveyed and laid out, and disposed of under the control of the Department.

That as soon as these facts came to my knowledge, the protest, before referred to, signed by a majority of the residents of Dewey and by all of the property holders excepting two, was filed with the Dawes Commission for transmission to the honorable Secretary of the Interior; that this petition was not circulated for signatures by myself or any members of my family (except that my son, Joe A. Bartles, did procure the signatures of two persons thereto), all the other signatures thereto having been solicited and obtained by other citizens and residents of the town of Dewey.

That I have acted in entire good faith with all persons concerned; that it has been my bona fide intention for the past five years to have the allotments of myself and family taken upon the lands hereinbefore mentioned and described, and it was for this purpose that I bought the improvements and claims of the original Indian holders; that within the past four years I have, in furtherance of the contracts made with the individuals to whom I have granted permission to settle upon the lands which myself and family expected to take in our allotment, caused so much of said lands as are embraced in the limits now proposed to be segregated as the town of Dewey to be surveyed and platted, and have graded a number of the streets therein, and have myself erected permanent and substantial buildings, which aggregate in number about thirty-two and which have cost me in the aggregate the sum of $75,000.

That I have acted upon the belief that I was entitled to take the lands upon which I purchased the original improvements as allotments for myself and family, and have expended my money on the faith of being able eventually to secure said lands as the allotments of myself and family; that practically all of the other allotable lands of the Cherokee Nation are now taken up, and it would be almost an impossibility for me to find suitable allotments elsewhere for myself and family, and that it would be an injustice to now deprive us of the right of taking these lands in allotment.

That myself and family have already filed upon the lands embraced in the original declarations of our intention attached hereto, and have endeavored to file upon the lands embraced in the plat of the town of Dewey, which is attached hereto, which lie in sections 20 and 29, but the Dawes Commission has not permitted us to make filing thereon on account of the fact that the question of whether a Government town site would be reserved at this place has not been determined, and we are still desirous of filing upon said lands in sections 20 and 29.

J. H. BARTLES.

Subscribed to and sworn to before me this 11th day of February, 1903.
MINNIE P. DUMAS, Notary Public.

REGULATION OF CORPORATIONS.

Mr. HOAR. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 17) requiring corporations engaged in interstate commerce to make returns, prohibiting rebates and discriminations and the use of interstate commerce in attempts to destroy competition, and for other purposes, to report it with amendments.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I wish to say for myself that as a member of the Judiciary Committee I can not concur in the report which has just been made.

Of course this is not the time or place to give reasons for my dissent, but briefly they may be stated thus: A large proportion of the bill, that which came over from the House, I think has been more wisely and appropriately treated in legislation which has been already enacted at this session; and as to the new matter proposed by amendments, I think there are unconstitutional provisions in them, and that if they were within the constitutional authority of Congress they are mischievous and would work great injury to the business of the United States.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I desire to say that the usual practice in the Senate is to state the reasons for and against such measures when they are up for consideration and debate. So my honorable friend has, out of order, stated his views now. I will not state mine yet.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not think I was out of order for the reason that I suppose it would have been entirely in order and according to the customary practice of the Senate to have submitted my views in writing as one of the minority of the committee. Certainly if I had asked for that permission it would have been, as it always is, granted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed upon the Calendar.

The being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Judson E. Walker, late train master, United States Army, and to pay him a pension of $12 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY H. RUMPLE.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 17247) granting a pension to Mary H. Rumple, to report it favorably without amendment. I wish to call the attention of the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] to this report.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered at this time.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Mary H. Rumple, widow of John N. W. Rumple, late captain Company H, Second Regiment Iowa Volunteer Cavalry, and to pay her a pension of $30 per month.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No; it is a resolution proposing to pay, the Chair judges from the casual reading, the salaries of two former Senators between the beginning of the Congress and the time when they were seated.

Mr. BURROWS. I judge, from the reading of it, that it is some matter upon which the Committee on Privileges and Elections has just reported adversely. I think that ought to be stated in this connection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carlina, as it proposes to make a payment out of the contingent fund of the Senate, asks that it be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. BURROWS. I have no objection to that reference.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to make an inquiry of the Chair.

It seems to me that in a matter which involves a general policy, which policy is always first considered by a certain committee and would involve the expenditure of money, the reference to that committee should be made first, before a reference to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses, because they are not expected to deal with questions of policy, but only with questions specially relating to the fund, making payments from it at the will of the Senate.

So, unless the rule requires otherwise, it seems to me the resolution ought to go first to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and then if it be reported unfavorably the Senate will deal with the question, and if the Senate overrule the committee it will then go the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The motion was agreed to.

READING OF WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair asks the Secretary to read the following order.

The Secretary read from the Senate Journal, page 103, January 24, 1901, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, as follows:

On motion by Mr. HOAR,

Ordered, That, unless otherwise directed, on the 22d day of February in each year, or if that shall be on Sunday, then on the day following, immediately after the reading of the Journal, Washington's Farewell Address shall be read to the Senate by a Senator to be designated for the purpose by the presiding officer, and that thereafter the Senate will proceed with its ordinary business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Presiding Officer designates as the reader of the address on Monday, the 23d instant, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS].

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands:

A bill (H. R. 15985) to confirm certain forest lien selections made under the act approved June 4, 1897;

A bill (H. R. 16069) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell certain lands therein mentioned; and

A bill (H. R. 16946) to amend an act entitled "An act to extend the coal-land laws to the District of Alaska," approved June 6, 1900.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

A bill (H. R. 14384) to establish a life-saving station at the mouth of Black River, at or near the city of Lorain, in the State of Ohio;

A bill (H. R. 16138) granting the right of way to the Kenova and Big Sandy Railroad Company through the Government lands at Lock No. 2, Big Sandy River, and at Lock No. 3, Big Sandy River, both in Wayne County, W. Va.; and

A bill (H. R. 17243) to amend "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved June 13, 1902.

The bill (H. R. 17085) to effectuate the provisions of the additional act for the international convention for the protection of industrial property, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

ARKANSAS RIVER BRIDGE AT MOORS ROCK, ARKANSAS.

Mr. BERRY. A bill has come from the House of Representatives, which I think is on the table, for the construction of a bridge across the Arkansas River at or near Moors Rock, Arkansas, which I shall be glad to have the Chair lay before the Senate, if it be agreeable to the Chair to do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 17204) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Arkansas River at or near Moors Rock, in the State of Arkansas; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, there is a Senate bill reported from the Committee on Commerce precisely similar to the bill from the House of Representatives, which is numbered 2983 in the order of business on the Calendar. I ask that the House bill may take the place on the Calendar of the Senate bill and that the Senate bill be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order will be made. Senate bill 7338 on the same subject will be indefinitely postponed, in the absence of objection.

STATEHOOD BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. QUAY, as follows:

Whereas House bill 12543, to enable the people of Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico to form constitutions and State governments and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, has been under discussion in the Senate since the 10th day of December last, and must fail unless voted upon at an early date:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that a date and hour prior to the 2d of March next should be fixed for a final vote upon the bill and all amendments that are pending or may be offered thereto.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, I do not desire to press the resolution to a final disposition to-day, but to say in explanation of its object that, as the Senate has noticed, from day to day, for a month and more, I have been asking for unanimous consent to fix a day and hour for the determination of this statehood proposition, and invariably I have been met with a single objection.

The resolution merely states that it is the sense of the Senate that before the adjournment of this Congress the statehood bill should be voted upon. It does not fix any day for a vote, but it expresses what is certainly the sense of every friend of the statehood bill, that there ought to be a vote. I think I do not err when I say that is the sense of every friend of the statehood bill. If I am in error, I should be glad to be corrected now.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I should like to ask the Senator a question, with his permission.

Mr. QUAY. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. If the proposition of the resolution is to fix a day for a vote it means a good deal to some of us on this floor as to how that day is to be fixed. I am willing to vote for a resolution that there shall be a day fixed by unanimous consent, but I am not willing to say that the majority shall have the right to fix a day for a vote without regard to the views of the minority.

Mr. QUAY. The only method of fixing a day for a vote is by unanimous consent.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That is the only proper way of fixing it.

Mr. QUAY. I have no objection to that. The proposition of the resolution is simply that there ought to be a vote, and it is offered because I have reason to believe that among the opponents of the statehood bill there are many gentlemen who are fair enough to be willing to yield us a day for a vote, and I shall be glad to give them an opportunity to put themselves on record. However, I understand that there is some sensitiveness on the other side of the Chamber in relation to the pressure of this resolution as being in a measure an advance toward cloture.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I have no objection to the resolution being presently voted upon with the understanding that it means what the Senator from Pennsylvania says it must mean. I do not want there to be any doubt about that.

Mr. SPOONER. But there is no unanimous agreement that it means that.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I want it to mean that when I vote for it.

Mr. QUAY. I do not wish the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] to amend my resolution, but I have no objection to the amendment which the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] indicates. However, the resolution can go on the Calendar. I have to-day offered a similar resolution which will come up to-morrow, I presume, in its regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution goes to the Calendar.

Mr. QUAY. Having the floor, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the statehood bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator will withhold that motion for a moment, there are two other resolutions to be laid before the Senate.

Mr. ALDRICH. Before the resolution of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] passes from the consideration of the Senate, I think that a motion ought to be entered, which I have no doubt the chairman of the Committee on Rules [Mr. SPOONER] intends to make.

Mr. SPOONER. I rose for that purpose. I move to refer the resolution to the Committee on Rules. Let that motion go over with the resolution.

Mr. QUAY. I would prefer to have a vote upon that question at once. We may as well take it now as at any other time.

Mr. GALLINGER and others. That is right.

Mr. QUAY. I ask for the yeas and nays upon the proposition of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator from Pennsylvania has discovered a method by which he can get a vote without discussion upon this question, he will probably solve the whole problem.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, I do not pretend to have invented any plan of securing a vote upon this bill. I know as well as any other Senator upon this floor that any half dozen determined men can prevent the continuous consideration or, if not the consideration, a vote upon any proposition before this Senate prior to the 4th of March; but I think it is fair that the Senate itself should have an opportunity as a whole to say whether or not it believes that it is exactly fair dealing to do that. That is the intention of this resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution has gone to the Calendar. Is it desired to restore it to its position?

Mr. SPOONER. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. QUAY. I prefer to have a vote on the motion.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not need to ask unanimous consent of the Senator, I suppose, to say that I have withdrawn the motion.

Mr. BATE. With the confusion existing in the Chamber it is impossible to understand on this side what is the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

Mr. SPOONER. As I have withdrawn the motion, it is not very important what it may have been.

Mr. BATE. It is a part of the business of the Senate, and we ought to know what it is; but of course it will go into the RECORD.

INVESTIGATION OF AFFAIRS IN THE PHILIPPINES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day; which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution yesterday submitted by Mr. CARMACK, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Philippines be authorized and instructed to sit during the recess of Congress for the purpose of prosecuting the investigation heretofore authorized by resolution of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. I move to refer the resolution to the Committee on the Philippines.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves the reference of the resolution to the Committee on the Philippines. The question is on that motion.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, I believe I shall ask for the yeas and nays on that proposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee asks for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. CARMACK. I do.

POST-OFFICE BUILDING AT MARBLEHEAD, MASS.

Mr. HOAR. I have requested the Senator from Tennessee to yield, in order to allow me to ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of a bill which has been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. CARMACK. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. HOAR. It is essential that the bill should be passed at the earliest possible moment, in order to be provided for in the sundry civil appropriation bill; and as I shall be obliged to leave the Senate for a few days, I ask unanimous consent at this time for the consideration of the bill (S. 7051) to extend the limit of cost for the United States post-office building at Marblehead, Mass.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes that so much of section 4 of the act entitled "An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, and for other purposes," approved June 6, 1902, as fixes the limit of cost for the United States post-office building at Marblehead, Mass., at $40,000, be amended so as to extend the limit of cost of the building to $70,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ABSENTEE WYANDOTTE INDIANS.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. CARMACK. I do.

Mr. HARRIS. With the consent of the Senator from Tennessee, I should like to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3214) to authorize the Absentee Wyandotte Indians to select certain lands, and for other purposes. The bill is recommended by the Committee on Indian Affairs, by the Secretary of the Interior, and by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. I think it will give rise to no debate.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to the consideration of the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That each living adult Absentee Wyandotte Indian whose name appears upon a census roll of Absentee Wyandotte Indians, to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior, may select in person or by his duly authorized attorney in fact, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, from the public domain, 80 acres of agricultural land subject to homestead entry; and the heirs of any deceased Absentee Wyandotte Indian so enrolled and approved may in like manner select a like quantity of land in the name of their deceased ancestor, and the natural or legal guardian of any minor Absentee Wyandotte so enrolled may in like manner select 80 acres of agricultural land for his ward, and when lands shall have been so selected by any person entitled to make such selection, and such selection is approved by the Secretary of the Interior, he shall cause a patent to issue in the name of the enrolled Absentee Wyandotte by or for whom such selection has been made, which patent shall contain the condition that the lands covered thereby shall not be aliened within ten years after date of patent without the consent of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That as soon as any such selection has been made and approved, the pro rata share of the Indian by or for whom such selection was made in the funds provided in the acts of August 15, 1894, and March 2, 1895, shall thereby be relinquished to the United States and shall be covered into the Treasury as proceeds of the sales of public lands.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT OREGON CITY, OREG.

Mr. QUAY. Now, Mr. President, if the morning business is concluded——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is not concluded. There is a resolution which has been laid before the Senate which the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has moved to refer, on which motion the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] took the floor, and asked for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SIMON. With the consent of the Senator from Tennessee, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3635) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a building thereon at Oregon City, in the State of Oregon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. CARMACK. With pleasure.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 1, line 7, after the word "apparatus," to strike out "elevators;" and in line 11, after the word "apparatus," to strike out "elevators;" so as to make the clause read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office, land office, and other Government offices at Oregon City, in the State of Oregon, the cost of said site and building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, complete, not to exceed the sum of $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the clause from line 14 to line 21, inclusive, on page 3, as follows:

No money shall be used for the purpose mentioned until a valid title to the site of said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Oregon shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INVESTIGATION OF AFFAIRS IN THE PHILIPPINES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution submitted yesterday by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] providing for an investigation of affairs in the Philippines is now before the Senate, the pending question being on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to refer the resolution to the Committee on the Philippines.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, I have no desire to debate the resolution, and if I could have any assurance, or if I had any reason to believe that the Committee on the Philippines would report this resolution back to the Senate in time to have any action upon it, I should have no objection to its going to that committee, but

I have every reason to believe that if the resolution goes there it will simply be smothered; it will never be reported back to the Senate, and we shall never have any action on it at all.

In view of the fact that the committee arbitrarily stopped the investigation ordered by the Senate at the last session of Congress, and have refused to go on with it at this session, I take it that the resolution ought to pass, advising and instructing the committee to proceed with the investigation during the recess of Congress. For that reason I should like to have a vote on the resolution, and I should like to have it now.

I repeat, I should not object to the resolution going to the committee if I could have any assurance or any promise from the chairman of the committee that the resolution would be reported back to the Senate within any reasonable time. In the absence of such an assurance I want a vote, and I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts to refer the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to refer the resolution to the Committee on the Philippines, on which the yeas and nays have been demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MCLAURIN]. In his absence, I withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. TALIAFERRO (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT]. In his absence, I withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY]; but I will take the liberty, if it is proper, to transfer the pair to the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. DEPEW (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire if the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that he has not voted.

Mr. DEPEW. Then I beg leave to withdraw my vote, as I have a general pair with that Senator.

Mr. NELSON (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire if the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that he has not voted.

Mr. NELSON. In that case I withdraw my vote, as I have a general pair with that Senator.

Mr. TURNER (after having voted in the negative). I inquire if the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that he has not voted.

Mr. TURNER. I have a general pair with that Senator, and therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. DANIEL (after having voted in the negative). I inquire whether the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] is recorded as voting?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that he is not recorded.

Mr. DANIEL. Then I withdraw my vote, Mr. President, as I have a general pair with that Senator.

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. MONEY] is unavoidably absent on account of sickness in his family.

Mr. DUBOIS (after having voted in the negative). I am informed that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] has not voted. I have a general pair with that Senator, and as this seems to be a political question, I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 37, nays 23; as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed, with amendments, the following bills and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (S. 3560) to amend an act entitled "An act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by compelling common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to equip their cars with automatic couplers and continuous brakes and their locomotives with driving-wheel brakes, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1893, and amended April 1, 1896;

A bill (S. 7043) to establish a light-house depot for the Second light-house district, Boston Harbor, Massachusetts; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 108) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase additional ground for the post-office, court-house, and custom-house at Jacksonville, Fla.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 16727) for the erection of a light-house in Boston Harbor; and

A bill (H. R. 17192) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue a patent to the city of Buffalo, Wyo., for certain tracts of land.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. 12508) granting a pension to James Jones.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 16915) authorizing the commissioners' court of Escambia County, Ala., to construct a bridge across Conecuh River at or near a point known as McGowans Ferry, in said county and State; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

ELMER E. FORESHAY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previons day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. DUBOIS yesterday, and the Senate proceeded to its consideration, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Civil Service Commission is hereby directed to furnish to the United States Senate a statement of the charges and evidence on account of which Elmer E. Foreshay was dismissed from the surveyor-general's office of Idaho.

Also, whether under the ruling of the civil service he is eligible to any other position in the Government service.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate agree to the resolution?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I do not know that there is any special objection to the passage of the resolution, except this: It seems to me that if we are going into the business of calling upon the Civil Service Commission to report the charges upon which persons are discharged from the classified service we will have a great deal of that kind of business. I do not know anything about the particular circumstances of this case, and I should like to have the Senator from Idaho show to the Senate that it differs from a great number of others and that there are special reasons why we should call for the charges and proceedings in this case.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, I am very glad to do so.

Mr. Foreshay was a member of a political party and his chief was a member of another political party, the chief being the surveyor-general of Idaho. The surveyor-general of Idaho thought he ought to surround himself with clerks who, in his opinion, could properly discharge the duties of his office, and he made several changes in his office. That brought on a conflict with the Civil Service Commission. Quite a fight was inaugurated, spreading over a considerable time, and resulting in an investigation. Now this clerk, Foreshay, who did not belong to the political party of the surveyor-general, was ordered by the surveyor-general to receive contributions for campaign purposes. For that he was dismissed.

In a letter and by telegram I called the attention of the Civil Service Commission to the fact that this young man did not belong to the party for whose benefit it was alleged that he was receiving contributions, and that if he had acted in that capacity it was under duress, and that he ought not to be punished therefor. If he had not obeyed the orders of the surveyor-general he would most likely have been dismissed by him; and after acting as the recipient of contributions, under the orders of the surveyor-general, he was dismissed by the Civil Service Commission. All I could get from the Civil Service Commission was a reference to the statutes, which provide that if anyone contributes money for campaign purposes or receives contributions for that purpose he shall be dismissed. As I understand, no charges at all have been preferred against this young man, except that he received contributions. The surveyor-general happened to be the chairman of the State committee, I think, at the time.

Mr. HALE. Who dismissed this man?

Mr. DUBOIS. The Civil Service Commission.

Mr. HALE. By what warrant?

Mr. DUBOIS. Under a statute, which they cited, making it a cause for dismissal if a clerk or anyone in the civil service contributes to the campaign fund of any party or acts as the recipient of campaign funds, I think.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly we are all familiar with that statute; it is clear in its terms; but to me it is a surprise to hear the Senator from Idaho state that the Civil Service Commission has the power to execute that law by removing a man. Is the Senator certain that the Civil Service Commission, by specific act as a Commission, removed this young man?

Mr. DUBOIS. I am certain of this, I will say to the Senator from Maine. I telegraphed to the Civil Service Commission, protesting against the removal of this young man on the ground that he had received contributions for the campaign fund. I addressed my communication to the Civil Service Commission and received my answer from the Civil Service Commission stating the reasons why he was removed. I am safe in making the statement that the surveyor-general did not ask for his removal, because he was acting under the orders of the surveyor-general.

Mr. HALE. The surveyor-general not only did not ask for his removal——

Mr. DUBOIS. But he combated it.

Mr. HALE. But he did not remove him? This has developed what to me I say is a surprise, that the Civil Service Commission can remove a man. They can call attention to the fact of the law having been violated, but I think in this case, as the young man is undoubtedly out—there is no question about that?

Mr. DUBOIS. He is out.

Mr. HALE. I think it probable the Senator will find that he is out by the act perhaps of the Secretary of the Interior, who is at the head of the Department and who acted upon the certification to him from the Civil Service Commission that the law had been violated. But I have supposed, although I may be wrong about it, that enormous as are the powers of the Civil Service Commission, and aggrandizing as it does constantly and seeking new fields for investigation and for power, there was one point where they were obliged to call a halt, and that is in arbitrarily dismissing a man.

Mr. DUBOIS. I will not state that the Civil Service Commission removed this man, but I will state that I can not find out anything about it, and I say to the Senate that this young man does not belong to the party to which his chief belongs, and that he was discharged for the sole reason that he received contributions which were given to advance the principles of the party to which his chief belonged.

This is the only charge, so far as I have been able to ascertain, that lies against him anywhere. I thought it was an injustice that with no charges against the competency of the man, he should be discharged, and I asked the Civil Service Commission if he could be reinstated. I never saw the young man, I will say. It is no personal matter to me; but our folks there all thought it was unjust. I asked and recommended to the Civil Service Commission that he be reinstated in the service somewhere and received a very curt reply which conveyed to me no information at all.

Now, the surveyor-general was removed after an investigation extending over quite a long time, I think, and through the intense activity of the Civil Service Commission, and he was the best surveyor-general the State of Idaho ever had.

Mr. HALE. I suppose he was removed by the Secretary of the Interior, probably, was he not?

Mr. DUBOIS. But the Secretary of the Interior, I think, did not want to remove him. I am satisfied that the President of the United States and the Secretary of the Interior both regarded this man as one of the most competent surveyors-general in the service. But the Civil Service Commission were determined he should be removed, and in his removal, I suppose, in some way this young man was mixed up, and he also was removed, although he did not belong to the party that his chief did.

What I should like, as the Senator will see by reading my resolution, is to find out something about it.

Mr. HALE. I have no doubt the Senator is right—that these proceedings were all instigated and carried out by the Civil Service Commission. They got the impression that this man was not doing certain things which they thought ought to have been done or was doing things that they thought ought not to have been done, and they appealed to the higher officers of the Department, and the higher officers of the Department yielded to them. I have no doubt the Senator is right—that the moving power in this matter was the Civil Service Commission.

I do not suppose the act of dismissal was done by them. It was done by somebody who yielded to the importunities of this Commission, which are constant in every branch of the Government, interfering with men who are good officers, but who perhaps may technically be guilty of something of this kind. I think the Senator is right about that.

Mr. DUBOIS. Does it not appeal to the Senator from Maine at all when a Senator says to him that he directed all of his inquiries to the Civil Service Commission and received from the Civil Service Commission all of his replies stating why this man was removed, not referring me to the Secretary of the Interior or anybody else, but answering my inquiries directly, leading me, of course, to suppose that they were the ones who did it, and at any rate——

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator must know that they have no power to do it.

Mr. HALE. They have the moral power to enforce removal——

Mr. SPOONER. They have the power to investigate.

Mr. HALE. And this is an instance of it.

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly. They undoubtedly called upon the Secretary of the Interior to remove this man and preferred the charges against him.

Mr. HALE. And he yielded.

Mr. SPOONER. And he yielded. I suppose if it appeared clearly to the Secretary of the Interior that the man had violated the law, as it is admitted by the Senator from Idaho that he had, he had to yield.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. DUBOIS. Excuse me for just a moment.

Mr. SPOONER. I suppose it is true that if this young man violated the law by command of his superior, the Secretary of the Interior would likely have to remove him for the violation of the law. It certainly can not be true, as the Senator from Maine says, that the Civil Service Commission can remove an employee of the Government unless it be one of their own.

Mr. DUBOIS. I would take the position, if any other Senator had brought up this question, that it is unjust when an employee is directed by a superior officer to do something, and he does it under the direction of the superior officer, to remove him from his position and from any opportunity to be reinstated.

Mr. HALE. I do not wonder that the Senator is somewhat stirred up by this matter, and it looks to me as if the young man had improperly suffered, that his offense was technical, that he was acting under the advice or direction of his superior. I do not want to object to the resolution. I think it would be a good thing to have the facts brought out.

Mr. DUBOIS. I may be mistaken, there may be other facts of which I am not aware, but I can not find what they are.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate agree to the resolution?

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, one moment. My objection to the resolution does not go at all to the facts upon which this young man was removed. I think every day men are removed, and there is a standing order that no man shall be removed from the classified service except upon charges which shall be exhibited to him and an opportunity to defend against which shall be accorded to him. But I believe that if we pass this resolution and turn the Senate directly or indirectly into a court of appeal in these cases it will prove to be a source of infinite trouble to every member of this body. Suppose every man who is removed from an office or a position, and who thinks, as they all think, that he was unjustly removed, should apply to his Senator and insist upon it that the Senate should pass a resolution calling for the evidence, bringing the matter here to be discussed in the Senate, with a view to some sort of constraint upon the Civil Service Commission.

I think it is a matter that belongs entirely to the executive department. If any breach of the law is being perpetrated by the Civil Service Commission or by any executive officer of the Government it is proper enough for the Senate to inquire into it with a view to affording a legislative remedy. It is not proposed, I suppose, by the Senator from Idaho through this resolution to invoke any subsequent action of the Senate. It is simply an investigation to determine whether or not this young man has been treated unjustly by the executive department of the Government in administering a law of Congress. Now, where will it end?

Mr. DUBOIS. I will say to the Senator from Wisconsin that if the report which they make is convincing to the Senators that this young man has been unjustly removed, without sufficient cause, perhaps we might enact such legislation as would prevent the recurrence of similar cases in the future.

Mr. SPOONER. Upon the Senator's statement I doubt whether the young man was unjustly removed. The Senator says he is a young man of capacity. I supposed he knew that as an employee of the Government in that position he was by law prohibited from accepting or soliciting contributions for political purposes.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PERKINS in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. SPOONER. In a moment. Of course, if he did it by direction of his superior officer, that should perhaps be considered in mitigation, but he had no right to take a command of his superior officer, as his superior officer had no right to give it, to disobey a law. The result in this case, as stated by the Senator, is that both the officer who gave the command to violate the law and the employee who violated it were removed.

Mr. DUBOIS. I will say to the Senator from Wisconsin that the surveyor-general was removed because he had removed subordinates without the consent of the Civil Service Commission, in violation of civil-service rules. That is what he was removed for, and he had exercised that power and was exercising that power when he asked this young man to receive contributions. I think it is pretty hard to say a young man should refuse to obey the orders of his superior because there is a law saying that he shall not contribute or receive contributions, when at the same time the superior was removing men from his office——

Mr. SPOONER. But the surveyor-general ought to have been removed for asking the subordinate to do an unlawful thing. If he wanted to collect money for political purposes he ought to have done it himself and taken the responsibility himself. Instead of that he asked the subordinate who held a position to violate the law. He ought to have been removed for that. At all events he was removed. But my objection to the resolution is that it is the beginning of procedure in the Senate which I think will lead us to an immense deal of trouble.

Mr. HALE. It opens the door.

Mr. SPOONER. It opens the door.

Mr. TILLMAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin whether or not this young man was not between the devil and the deep sea? With a superior who was removing subordinates arbitrarily, contrary to the civil-service rules, and the civil service not protecting them, and his receiving an order to collect contributions, would he not have been removed immediately by this same arbitrary man if he had refused to obey?

Mr. SPOONER. I think he may have thought he was between the devil and the deep sea, but I do not think he was.

Mr. TILLMAN. It seems they both got into the sea somehow or other.

Mr. SPOONER. What is that?

Mr. TILLMAN. It seems they both got into the sea somehow or other—the one because he ordered the doing of an unlawful thing and the other for doing an unlawful thing.

Mr. SPOONER. I think if this young man, knowing that he was asked by his superior officer to receive subscriptions and collections for political purposes in violation of the law, had brought that fact to the attention of the Secretary of the Interior and the Civil Service Commission, instead of obeying the order, he would not have been between the devil and the deep sea.

Mr. TILLMAN. You think he would have been protected?

Mr. SPOONER. I think he would have been protected.

Mr. DUBOIS. The Senator from Wisconsin is speaking theoretically. As a matter of fact, the gentlemen who were removed arbitrarily by the surveyor-general have not been able to get back, and are still out. It is very easy to theorize, but it seems we are entitled to know.

I do not want to distress the Civil Service Commission, nor do I care to distress the gentlemen who are touchy about the Civil Service Commission, and if the Senator from Wisconsin will suggest that the inquiry be directed to anybody else who can furnish the information which I desire, I shall be perfectly willing to accept the suggestion. But I think I am entitled to the information.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator from Idaho whether he himself has applied for the facts which he asks the Senate to seek by this resolution and whether they are kept from his knowledge by the Civil Service Commission? I mean as to this particular case. The Senator seems to have knowledge of what the facts are. Is there any refusal on the part of the Commission to let him know what their records disclose, if he desires it?

Mr. DUBOIS. I have not begged and implored the Civil Service Commission to give me any details.

Mr. HOAR. I did not ask the Senator——

Mr. DUBOIS. I have addressed one or two communications to them, and the replies indicated to me that they did not care to give me very much information. In addition to that, I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts, the Secretary of the Interior sent one gentleman there to make an investigation and the Civil Service Commission sent another gentleman, and they were on the ground at the same time. The representative of the Secretary of the Interior held his meetings openly, and the surveyor-general and the clerks came before him, and they had their inquiry and hearing. The representative of the Civil Service Commission held his secret, and nobody knew what was going on. Both of those reports were presented, and the Civil Service Commission in regard to this particular case has not been extremely anxious, to say the least, to let the facts be known.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I hold that the lawmakers of the country are entitled to access to all the records of the Executive Departments, to inform themselves in regard to their legislative duties in regard to subjects about which they are to legislate, with certain necessary exceptions, such as matters relating to diplomacy still in process of accomplishment or perhaps matters relating to diplomacy which the public faith and propriety require should be received in confidence and kept in confidence, and except matters relating to military and naval operations in war, and certain other matters relating to the administration of justice when cases are still pending. We ought not to invade those subjects and make public what the Departments think should be kept private. But with those exceptions I think we are entitled to absolutely free access. Those records are kept largely and chiefly that the lawmakers and the people dealing with the administration of the Government may know what happens.

So when any Senator is denied by a Department access to such information, except in the matters I have stated, as he wants to qualify himself for his duties, I should make it a rule always to vote for the inquiry, and the Senate has always made it a rule to adopt such resolutions when any Senator proposes them, except in one or two cases when there has been some high party excitement. In two cases recently the Senate has referred certain resolutions to committees. So I should vote for the Senator's resolution if it should appear that he had made suitable attempts—I do not speak of begging or imploring, of course, but if he has addressed a civil note to the Department and does not get the information he wants. But otherwise, it seems to me, we ought not to take up every little individual matter and make it a subject of action by the Senate.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, in my resolution I have not asked the Senate to go into this case at all. I do not understand what the Senator from Massachusetts means by "taking up every little matter," or what he means by wanting to know whether a Senator has tried to get information. I do not know where he draws the line. This thing seemed so unjust to me that while I was 2,000 miles away I telegraphed to the Civil Service Commission at length, saying that, in my judgment, it was unjust to remove a man who was acting under duress; that it did not seem possible to me that this young gentleman could have willingly contributed to the success of a party to which he did not belong, and that if he received contributions or if he gave contributions it must have been under duress; and I asked them not to act hastily in regard to it. I wrote to them afterwards, I think, twice, and the replies which I got were scant courtesy, in my judgment.

As I said before. I do not know this young gentleman at all. I have no interest in him personally. To my knowledge I never saw him. I have not been importuned by his friends. Several months ago when it came up it made a great impression on my mind, and I wanted to know if he could not be reinstated in the service, because it came to me from sources undeniable that he was very competent and that this was the only complaint against him. I should like to know whether there is anything else upon which they have based his removal, and if there is nothing else, I think Congress ought to rectify it so that similar occurrences will not happen in the future.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, it does not seem to me that this is a matter which we can rectify. We can not order this young man to be restored. I am not going to object to the passage of the resolution after what has been said about it, but I desire now, before it passes, to say that I hope it will not be made a precedent for supposing, whenever a clerk or anybody in the classified service has been dismissed, that the Senate is going to take up the matter. If the Senator had said here that he had applied to the Civil Service Commission for a copy of the charges and evidence, and they would not give it to him, I should have no hesitation whatever in supporting the resolution for the purpose of enabling him to obtain that information.

I do not think the resolution really calls for any action on the part of the Senate. As was well observed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], it is manifest that we can not undertake to put ourselves in the position of a court of appeals to try over the question whether anyone in the classified service has been properly or improperly dismissed. But since so much discussion has been had in the matter, I am not inclined to insist seriously on the resolution being rejected.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, there is one view of this matter which seems to me to present a more important question than that which is limited strictly to the interest of this young man. If it be a fact that this violation of law was perpetrated by this young man under the orders of his superior officer, and if the response to this resolution, if it shall be adopted, shall convey to us information that that fact was known to the Civil Service Commission, and that the Civil Service Commission limited its condemnation to the young man and took no step against the superior officer, then it is a matter, Mr. President, which rises to the dignity of a subject entitled to very careful and very prompt consideration by Congress.

Now, I do not know whether those are the facts or not. I knew nothing of this resolution and have gathered no information except such as has been given by the debate. But from the utterances here to-day it seems to be the conceded fact that this young man violated the law in obedience to the order of his superior officer. It seems to be also the conceded fact that the Civil Service Commission has visited its condemnation upon the young man, and that it has failed to do what the Senator from Wisconsis says, and very properly says, it should have done—to extend it, and in much more peremptory and severe terms, to the officer at whose instance and under whose command this violation of the law was perpetrated.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I understood that the surveyor-general was removed also.

Mr. BACON. But the distinct statement is made here that he was removed for another cause.

Now, Mr. President, it is not simply a matter limited to that particular surveyor-general, but if it be a fact that superior officers in the departments, either in many or few instances, are guilty of this violation of law, not simply violating it themselves, but commanding and enforcing a violation of it by their subordinates, it is a most important matter to be brought to the attention of the Senate.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BACON. With pleasure.

Mr. DUBOIS. My colleague calls my attention to a fact which I had forgotten. The surveyor-general was not removed at all; he simply was not reappointed. The facts came up over his reappointment. He served out his term.

Mr. BACON. I think it is important, as this matter has been brought to the public attention, that the Civil Service Commission should be given an opportunity to make known, if such be a fact, that it condemned the principal as well as the subordinate, and that it condemned him in severer terms than it did the subordinate.

I think it is important that this matter should be brought to public attention, in order that the facts may be ascertained. Is this an isolated instance or is it a common occurrence? Has there simply been a violation in this particular instance, or is it an every-day occurrence or an every-year occurrence in the campaign that the superior officers, those who are put there to see that the law is observed by their inferiors, are themselves commanding the violation of law on the part of their inferiors?

Mr. CARMACK rose.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me just a moment, I do not mean to say that such is a fact, but I do say that when it has been brought to the attention of the Senate and seems to be a conceded fact that this violation of law was done in response to the demand of a superior officer, it ought to put Congress upon inquiry whether or not that is an isolated occurrence or whether it is a common one in the departments.

I yield to the Senator with pleasure.

Mr. CARMACK. I simply suggest to the Senator what seems to me an equally important fact in this matter, under the direction of the civil service, was the fact that those men who were discharged, as I understood the Senator from Idaho, for refusing to make a contribution, have not been reinstated. It is just as important to protect the men who obey the law and who refuse to violate the law as it is to punish the men who do violate the law.

Mr. BACON. That is true.

Mr. DUBOIS rose.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me a moment, I did not hear the entire debate as it has progressed, and I did not understand that these young men were discharged by this officer for that particular reason.

Mr. DUBOIS. No, Mr. President. I want to be absolutely correct.

Mr. BACON. And I do.

Mr. DUBOIS. The Senator from Tennessee is correct in principle; but the surveyor-general removed civil-service clerks from his office because he wanted clerks in there in whom he had confidence, not because they would not contribute to the campaign. Some of those clerks who were removed in violation of the civil-service law have not been able to get back, and they are not back now; but they were not removed because they would not contribute. They were removed for the convenience of the surveyor-general.

Mr. BACON. I quite agree with the suggestion of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] that it is not within the proper province of Congress to inquire as to the circumstances under which every employee is removed, and that it would be entering upon an interminable enterprise if we should undertake a thing of that kind.

Therefore I desire to be understood distinctly as not advocating the adoption of the pending resolution with reference specially to the merits or demerits of this young man, but because of the grave development which confronts us if the fact is, as I understand it to be, that an inferior, an employee, has been required to violate the law by a superior officer, and the further fact that it was brought to the attention of the Civil Service Commission, and that by reason of it the Commission proceeded against this young man, and that so far as information is given to us no steps were taken against his superior. That is a grave question, and if it be true it suggests the necessity for inquiry as to whether this is an isolated instance or whether there have been frequent occurrences of that kind, which is a still graver question. It is upon that line that I ventured to say a word in reference to the matter.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I have listened to the Senator from Georgia, and if there were foundation for what the Senator says, as there may be, although we are not informed of it, there would be great force in his statement. But the argument which the Senator from Georgia makes certainly would not be persuasive at all to secure a vote for the pending resolution.

We have a Civil Service Committee, and if the Senate is satisfied or is informed that superior officers are going unwhipped of justice while their subordinates are being punished for violating law under their command, our committee ought to be instructed to investigate the Civil Service Commission in that respect.

But this resolution calls for no such thing. This resolution calls for no report as to any charges made against the surveyor-general. An answer to it would elicit none of the information which the Senator from Georgia assumes to be now before the Senate.

Mr. BACON rose.

Mr. SPOONER. I speak of the removal of the surveyor.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator pardon me a moment in order that he may understand my position?

Mr. SPOONER. I understand it. I agree with it.

Mr. BACON. But in reference to the statement just made by the Senator. I suppose, of course, that there is upon record in the office of the Civil Service Commission the evidence relative to this matter. I suppose the entire evidence is there. I do not suppose that it is limited merely to a statement of fact that he did violate the law. Particularly if the young man was on trial, I suppose he stated the circumstances under which he did it and the command under which he did it. If so, that is information I want to get.

Mr. SPOONER. It would not at all elicit information from the Civil Service Commission as to the action which it took concerning the surveyor-general.

Mr. BACON. No; but the evidence taken.

Mr. SPOONER. That is what the Senator wants.

Mr. BACON. I understand that, and I wanted to say to the Senator that if the natural condition of the record is that which I suppose the Senator himself would consider the scope the testimony naturally covered, it would contain the very evidence we want.

In other words, here is a young man on trial. I presume that he was given a hearing, or at least if not, there was evidence taken. I suppose the fact is on record in the Civil Service Commission not only that he violated the law, but the circumstances under which he violated it, and the circumstances under which he received a command which caused him to violate it, evidence as to the fact that his superior officer required him to do it. If that exists, it is a fact that we want to know.

Mr. SPOONER. But the action which the Civil Service Commission took or did not take against the surveyor-general would be an entirely different thing. It would not elicit, and is not intended to elicit, any information from the Civil Service Commission as to whether it removed or caused the removal of the subordinate and took no action against the principal offender.

Resolved, etc., That the Civil Service Commission is hereby directed to furnish to the United States Senate a statement of the charges and evidence on account of which Elmer E. Foreshay was dismissed from the surveyor-general's office of Idaho.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator pardon me?

Mr. SPOONER. The resolution should be broadened, I think, to accomplish what the Senator from Georgia has in mind.

Mr. BACON. I would have no objection to its being broadened. On the contrary, I would like very much for it to be broadened. But I suggest, if the Senator will permit me, that if the Civil Service Commission should send us here a record of the evidence which it received, and that evidence disclosed the fact that it had been brought to the attention of the Civil Service Commission that this young man had violated the law, and that he had done so in obedience to the command of his superior officer, and the record showed simply a proceeding against the inferior and did not disclose anything against the superior, it would, in common parlance, certainly be up to the Commission to show why it had not so done.

Mr. SPOONER. The record would not show anything on the subject. It would simply show the charges and evidence on which this young man was removed. It does not call upon the Civil Service Commission to return to the Senate any record as to proceedings against the surveyor-general.

The Senator referred to me as being "touchy" about the Civil Service Commission. He is mistaken about that. I have not opposed this resolution out of any concern for the Civil Service Commission. I opposed it on our own account. I opposed it, Mr. President, because I know, and so does every other Senator here know, that if we once begin the practice of introducing resolutions and calling for the charges and the evidence in the case of every young man in this country who is discharged from office, we will inaugurate a line of business which will keep us busy. A man from my State comes to me, and they often come, and says he has been unjustly removed—and almost every one thinks he is unjustly removed. I go to the Civil Service Commission and look into it. But he says: "I want you to go into the Senate and introduce a resolution. The Senate did it in the Foreshay case; why not in mine?" We will have petitions in all such cases not only from the men themselves, but from their friends and neighbors, and they will add to burdens that are now almost intolerable.

Now, the Civil Service Commission sometimes in discharging their duties are somewhat annoying to Senators and, I suppose, to Members of the House, but they are discharging their duties under the law generally and, I think, faithfully. My experience here as a Senator for nearly twelve years, and most of the time under an Administration with which I have been in sympathy, has led me to believe that the civil service, whatever it may be in other relations, is of vast importance to the country in the protection which it affords to gentlemen engaged in public life from constant and persistent pressure for little offices and from constant invocation for personal services and political influence in these matters of appointment and promotions and removals. And I want to say now that whatever men may think of the civil service law it is my conviction that if it were repealed and if we should go back to the old method we would tear away a dam which protects men in public life here measurably and would leave ourselves in a position where life here would be almost intolerable. I see nothing myself to criticize in the general conduct of the Civil Service Commission, and I believe the public interest requires us to stand by the civil-service law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it becomes the duty of the Chair to place before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 12543) to enable the people of Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico to form constitutions and State governments and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States.

Mr. DUBOIS. I ask unanimous consent that the regular order may be laid aside temporarily, without prejudice. It will take only a minute, I think, to dispose of the pending resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside for the purpose of considering the resolution now pending before the Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. QUAY. I will not object, with the understanding that the time taken up is to be brief.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. There has been so much said in regard to the Civil Service Commission that I would not like to take a vote upon the resolution at this time without having an opportunity to add some remarks of mine with reference to the suggestions which have been made.

Mr. HALE. Let the resolution go over, holding its place. There are other Senators who desire to be heard.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the resolution going over without prejudice?

Mr. QUAY. I think I will object to its holding its place. I desire to say that the resolution had better come in to-morrow behind the resolution now pending proposing to take the sense of the Senate on the statehood bill.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It will.

Mr. QUAY. If it comes in behind that resolution I have no objection.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It will come in behind that resolution.

Mr. DUBOIS. That is agreeable to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the resolution going over until to-morrow——

Mr. QUAY. I want to have no mistake about it. The resolution which was before the Senate to-day has gone to the Calendar. I introduced another resolution of the same kind which will come up in its regular order to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the resolution of the Senator from Idaho retaining its place upon the Calendar, second to the resolution which has been offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. QUAY. I have no objection to it in that shape.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Does the resolution go to the Calendar?

Mr. HALE. It is not on the Calendar.

Mr. QUAY. It is on the table.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Then it has not gone to the Calendar.

Mr. DUBOIS. Let it lie on the table to be taken up after the consideration of the resolution introduced by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

TENNESSEE RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. QUAY. Now I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. DEPEW. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] wishes the floor for a moment.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, House bill 17052 is the same as Senate bill 7158, which has been reported from the Committee on Commerce. It is a bridge bill. I move to substitute the House bill for the Senate bill on the Calendar and to indefinitely postpone the Senate bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama asks that a House bill be substituted for a Senate bill on the Calendar. The title of the House bill will be read.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 17052) to authorize the building of a railroad bridge across the Tennessee River at a point between Lewis Bluff, in Morgan County, Ala., and Guntersville, in Marshall County, Ala.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama desire to have the bill considered at this time?

Mr. PETTUS. I do desire it, if the Senator from New York will indulge me.

Mr. DEPEW. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. QUAY. I will object to the further consideration of the bill at the present time. I did not understand when the Senator from Alabama took the floor that he proposed to pass a bill. I thought he merely wished to substitute one bill for another on the Calendar.

Mr. PETTUS. That was my intention. The Senator from Pennsylvania is correct as to what I intended to do and what I announced I intended to do. It was suggested to me whether I desired to pass the bill, and I said yes; but that was not my intention when I took the floor.

Mr. QUAY. I object for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the bill (S. 7158) to authorize the building of a railroad bridge across the Tennessee River at a point between Lewis Bluff, in Morgan County, Ala., and Guntersville, in Marshall County, Ala., will be indefinitely postponed and House bill 17052 will take its place on the Calendar. The Chair hears no objection, and such is the order of the Senate. The Senator from Pennsylvania objects to the further consideration of the House bill.

STATEHOOD BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12543) to enable the people of Oklahoma,

Arizona, and New Mexico to form constitutions and State governments and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States.

Mr. DEPEW addressed the Senate in continuation of the speech begun by him on the 11th instant. After having spoken about one hour.

Mr. PROCTOR. Will the Senator from New York kindly yield that I may present a conference report? It is on the Army bill. I will not ask it unless it is entirely agreeable to the Senator.

Mr. DEPEW. Certainly.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PROCTOR submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16567) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 27, 28, 33, 43, 44, 45, and 46.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 21, 22, 24, 25, 26, 29, 31, 32, 34, 35, 36, 37, 39, 40, 42, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, and 53; and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In line 3 of said amendment strike out the word "appointed" and insert in lieu thereof the word "enlisted;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lines 6 and 7 of said amendment strike out the following: "As military attachés at the United States embassies and legations abroad; and;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20, and agree to the same with amendments, as follows:

After the word "war," in line 5 of said amendment, insert the following: "for more than one year;" and beginning with the word "and," in line 11 of said amendment, strike out down to and including the word "honor," in line 19; and after the word "officer," in line 20 of said amendment, insert the following: "whose service on the active list does not exceed twenty years, and shall not apply to any officer," and strike out the proviso at the end of said amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: After the word "deposit," in line 2 of said amendment, strike out the words "money upon the same terms as enlisted men" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "of their pay;" and at the end of said amendment insert the following proviso: "Provided further, That said deposits of any one officer shall never exceed in the aggregate $5,000 at any one time;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: At the end of said amendment insert the following proviso: "Provided, That all volunteer officers now in the Porto Rico Provisional Regiment shall be mustered out on June 30, 1904, and their places be filled by detail from the line of the Army: Provided further, That any vacancy now existing or which may occur between now and June 30, 1904, shall be filled by detail from the line of the Army;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out lines 1 to 11, inclusive, of said amendment, and at the end of said amendment insert the following: "Provided further, That not more than $40,000 of the above appropriation shall be expended at any one post or station;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 41, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word inserted by said amendment and insert in lieu thereof the word "fifteen;" and after the word "million," in line 20, page 29 of the bill, insert the words "five hundred thousand;" and the Senate agree to the same.

REDFIELD PROCTOR,
J. V. QUARLES,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. A. T. HULL,
A. B. CAPRON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. McCOMAS. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill what has been done with the provision pertaining to the Porto Rican regiment. I thought from the reading of the report it may have been abandoned by the conferees.

Mr. PROCTOR. It has not been abandoned. The force is retained and the appropriation made. A provision was inserted by the Senate that Porto Ricans might be enlisted in the Regular Army. A further provision or compromise in the conference report provides that the volunteer officers shall be mustered out on the 30th of June, 1904. That gives them the full three years of service other volunteers have, and more; and it provides that vacancies now existing or hereafter occurring shall be filled by detail from officers of the Regular Army.

Mr. McCOMAS. No provision is made for the officers acting in Porto Rico to continue in the regular service?

Mr. PROCTOR. There is not. It was thought by the committee that they had quite as good an opportunity as other volunteer officers, and it appeared that most of them were not qualified to go into the Regular Army. Several of them had failed on the examination, and quite a number of them are far beyond the limit of age. They all have the opportunity civilians have, of an examination.

Mr. McCOMAS. I should like to ask the Senator also what has been done with the retirement clause?

Mr. PROCTOR. The original clause reported by the committee has been retained and enlarged a little in the direction of the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], which was agreed to in the Senate. The limit of service required was twenty years instead of twenty-five. It is practically the provision in regard to the Navy, which has been the law for several years.

Mr. McCOMAS. How does it affect officers on the retired list?

Mr. PROCTOR. Officers retired since the 11th of August, 1898, who served during the two wars, are entitled to the full benefit of it, and officers who have served twenty years.

Mr. McCOMAS. How as to those already retired?

Mr. PROCTOR. My impression is that it does not apply to officers retired previous to the 11th of August, 1898.

Mr. McCOMAS. I should like to hear read once more from the desk the amendment in respect to retirement.

Mr. PROCTOR. It was the last matter agreed upon by the conference, and I did not take a note of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Which amendment does the Senator from Maryland desire to have read?

Mr. McCOMAS. The amendment relating to the retirement of officers.

Mr. PROCTOR. Amendment No. 20.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20, and agree to the same with amendments, as follows:

After the word "war," in line 5 of said amendment, insert the following: "for more than one year;" and beginning with the word "and," in line 11 of said amendment, strike out down to and including the word "honor," in line 19, and after the word "officer," in line 20 of said amendment, insert the following: "whose service on the active list does not exceed twenty years, and shall not apply to any officer;" and strike out the proviso at the end of said amendment.

Mr. FORAKER. Can the section be read as it will read after these amendments are adopted?

Mr. COCKRELL. I think I can read it just the way it will stand when the report is adopted.

And any officer of the Army now on the active list, below the grade of major-general, who served with credit as an officer or an enlisted man in the regular or volunteer service during the civil war for more than one year before April 15, 1865, may, when retired, be retired by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, with the rank and retired pay of the next higher grade. This section shall apply to officers who have been retired on or since the 11th day of August, 1898, but shall not apply to any officer whose service on the active list does not exceed twenty years, and shall not apply to any officer who has been placed on the retired list by virtue of any special act of Congress, nor to any officer who has already received an advance of grade at the time of retirement, or with a view to retirement.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I should like to inquire of the Senator in charge of the bill what is the purpose in excluding from the benefits of this retirement act officers who have been retired by act of Congress?

Mr. PROCTOR. The purpose is that it was a special favor, and they received their reward by the act of Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT JACKSONVILLE, FLA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. R. 108) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase additional ground for the post-office, court-house, and custom-house at Jacksonville, Fla., which was, in line 3, to strike out the words "at this session of Congress."

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment made by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

LIGHT-HOUSE DEPOT, BOSTON HARBOR.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 7043) to establish a light-house depot for the Second light-house district, Boston Harbor, Massachusetts.

The amendment was, in line 4, to strike out all after "to" down to and including line 8, and to insert:

locate and establish a light-house depot for the Second light-house district in Boston Harbor, Massachusetts, on land owned by the United States, at a cost not to exceed $25,000.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

SAFETY APPLIANCES ON RAILROADS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3560) to amend an act entitled "An act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by compelling common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to equip their cars with automatic couplers and continuous brakes and their locomotives with driving-wheel brakes, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1893, and amended April 1, 1896, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. FORAKER subsequently said: I ask that Senate bill 3560 be printed as it passed the House, with the House amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 16727) for the erection of a light-house in Boston Harbor was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (H. R. 17192) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue a patent to the city of Buffalo, Wyo., for certain tracts of land was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

STATEHOOD BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12543) to enable the people of Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico to form constitutions and State governments and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States.

Mr. DEPEW resumed his speech. After having spoken for thirty-five minutes,

Mr. ALLISON and Mr. TILLMAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] is recognized.

Mr. ALLISON. I was about to ask the Senator from New York to yield to me in order that I may make a motion to adjourn. I yield, however, to the Senator from South Carolina before making the motion.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I desire to inquire if the Senator from New York has concluded his speech?

Mr. DEPEW. I have not concluded, but I yield to the Senator from South Carolina for to-morrow.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am very much obliged, and I shall take the floor when the Senate convenes and this bill comes up again.

[Mr. DEPEW'S speech will be published entire after it shall have been concluded.]

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, February 18, 1903, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, February 17, 1903.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

CORRECTIONS.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, the Journal will be approved.

Mr. SIMS. I rose for the purpose of making a statement in reference to the Journal, before it was approved.

The SPEAKER. A correction of the Journal has priority over a correction of the RECORD.

Mr. SIMS. I do not see the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONRY] present, but I think he understood—I so understood at the time—that unanimous consent was given to him to withdraw his remarks. It appears, however, in the Journal that they were expunged on motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE].

The SPEAKER. The business as it came up yesterday was the continuation of the consideration of the request of the gentleman from Indiana made some days before. So that the Journal, in stating that the action was taken on the request of the gentleman from Indiana, states the facts as they were.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise to correct the RECORD. The correction I desire to make is upon page 2273. It there appears that I moved to suspend the rules and pass House bill 17243. The RECORD shows, after stating the title or caption of the bill, that the bill provided that all after the enacting clause should be stricken out and certain language inserted. It reads:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

The facts are that House bill 16339 had been introduced by me and referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. The committee reported House bill 17243, intending it to be a substitute for the bill introduced by me. The report of the committee so styles it "a substitute therefor." There was no striking out of all after the enacting clause, but the committee bill, 17243, was passed. I desire the RECORD to show that this bill introduced by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] was the bill that passed.

The statement of the RECORD is in intention correct, but literally is not correct. The House bill 17243 is a substitute for House bill 16339, as stated in the report of the chairman of the committee. But the bill which was passed was House bill 17243. My statement does not change the condition of affairs in any respect, but the RECORD, as it now appears, would show that the river and harbor bill was repealed, which, of course, is not a fact.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Texas whether he has not got just what he wanted.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. I have got exactly what I wanted in fact; but the RECORD discloses that the bill which was passed repeals the river and harbor bill. Now, I do not know what it will show when it goes over to the Senate, but so far as the RECORD shows it discloses the fact that the river and harbor bill had been repealed by the bill that was passed.

The SPEAKER. Was this repeal, as the gentleman states, by virtue of the recommendations of the report of the committee, or any action taken on the floor of the House?

Mr. COOPER of Texas. The report of the committee is to the effect that they offer another bill as a substitute for the bill that I introduced, and the committee bill was the bill that passed.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman send up the report?

Mr. BURTON. If I may be allowed, the report is perfectly clear and the bill is perfectly clear. The bill recommends the adoption of a substitute. The substitute is in this language:

A bill to amend an act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works—and so forth, referring to the river and harbor bill of June, 1902. Then it goes on to state:

Be it enacted, etc., That the paragraph in said act relating to the improvement of the mouths of the Sabine and Natchez rivers, Texas, be amended so as to read as follows.

And, apparently in an entirely gratuitous manner, there is inserted in the RECORD the words:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

There was no recommendation of that kind in the report, and nothing that will justify the striking out of all after the enacting clause of the river and harbor bill. It must mean to strike out all after the enacting clause of the amending bill. The report recommends the adoption of the substitute, and the substitute clearly points out what is intended.

The SPEAKER. The language of the report is—

They accordingly recommend the accompanying substitute, and when the bill is amended by the adoption of said substitute they recommend that the bill do pass.

That is exactly what was done.

Mr. BURTON. The committee refers to the amending bill, and not the original bill.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, if the RECORD should disclose that all after the enacting clause of bill 16339 was stricken out and that House bill 17243 was inserted in lieu thereof, then the RECORD would be correct, and that was what was done.

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggests that in this case, as it seems to be somewhat complicated, the bill had better be held up, and then it can be put in some proper shape. The Chair will order the message to the Senate transmitting the bill to be held up.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, it is immaterial to me what the RECORD discloses. It is a fact that that bill passed, and it was in order to keep the RECORD in proper shape, as suggested by the War Department, after having examined it, that I make this motion to correct the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman states from his place that the action taken, while it gives him what he wants, repeals the river and harbor bill.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. No, the RECORD undertakes to show that the river and harbor bill was repealed, but I am objecting to having it show a repeal of the river and harbor act. I want the RECORD to show what occurred, and it is not at my own instance that I make the suggestion now.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that this matter stand over until to-morrow morning, and that in the meantime all action be stayed, and the matter referred to the Committee on Rules for a report to-morrow morning.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman moves that, the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors [Mr. BURTON] can make a perfectly clear and lucid statement of exactly what was done, and I would like the RECORD to be corrected in that shape.

Mr. PAYNE. I suggest to the gentleman that that statement can go before the Committee on Rules.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. That means delay.

Mr. PAYNE. It only means a delay of one day.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that course had better be taken. The matter is in a rather complicated shape, and if there is no objection this course will be pursued, in accordance with the suggestion of the gentleman from New York.

There was no objection.

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I notice that the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] is in his seat this morning. That being the case, I think I will proceed with the question of personal privilege that I raised on yesterday morning.

In a speech made by the gentleman from New York on Friday last he continued some comments which related to a debate that occurred between him and myself on the Saturday preceding. On the Saturday preceding I had occasion to make a comment upon a paragraph included in the bill introduced by him, and in order that the matter may be fully understood, I will call attention to the fact that it was the bill H. R. 15927, introduced by the gentleman from New York on December 11, 1902.

On that Saturday I read for the purpose of comment the following paragraph from that bill—and I hold the bill now in my hand.

The claim that any such testimony or evidence may tend to incriminate the person giving such evidence or testimony shall not be used against such person on the trial of any criminal proceeding.

The RECORD shows on page 1903 I read as follows. And I will read it, and the House will see that the language is identical:

The claim that any such testimony or evidence may tend to incriminate the person giving such evidence or testimony shall not be used against such person on the trial of any civil suit or criminal proceeding.

Whereupon I suggested that did not state a coherent proposition and it was not sensible. On the next page of the RECORD I suggested that if a certain clause had been inserted in that paragaph, which is not inserted, and was not inserted in the quotation, that clause should read as follows:

Shall not excuse such person from testifying, but such testimony if inserted in the proper place would make a coherent proposition.

The gentleman from New York on Friday took occasion to animadvert with some severity upon "the gentleman from Maine," and undertook to quote what the gentleman from Maine said on Saturday, but he interpolated this clause to which I have just called attention, that I have quoted from the RECORD, and put it into the mouth of "the gentleman from Maine"—in my judgment deliberately perverting the RECORD.

I have in my hand the minutes prepared by the gentleman from New York for the printer's use, and this portion of the RECORD that he injected into the RECORD is in his own handwriting, and I read:

Now I will read a paragraph of the bill—

That is what he said I said, and it is correct that far—

The claim that such testimony or evidence may tend to criminate the person giving such evidence or testimony—

Here comes the interpolation, perverting the RECORD, in the handwriting of the gentleman from New York—shall not excuse such person from testifying, but such testimony—

That is the clause interpolated within the minutes—

shall not be used against such person on the trial of any criminal proceeding.

Now, the gentleman from New York in his speech on Friday undertook to quote from his speech made on the preceding Saturday; and in his own speech made the preceding Saturday—and I read from his minutes prepared for the printer, because he has taken the printed matter from the RECORD—he quoted this paragraph from his bill exactly as it read in the bill, and exactly as it read in my quotation, as follows:

The claim that such testimony or evidence may tend to criminate the person giving such evidence or testimony shall not be used against such person on the trial of any criminal proceeding.

Having the same element of incoherence and lack of sense, agreeing exactly with the paragraph in his bill and with my quotation from it in my remarks. But here are the minutes of the gentleman from New York, and he has got an ink line starting after the word "not" and running out into the margin, and then he has this clause interpolated in his own remarks in order to make them consistent with the interpolation that he put in the remarks of "the gentleman from Maine:"

Excuse such persons from testifying, but such testimony shall not.

This I read from his minutes, furnished the printer with this written interpolation, so that I can reach no other conclusion than that the perversion of the RECORD was deliberate, premeditated, and intentional.

Now, I want to go a little bit further. I find that the gentleman proceeded at some length upon the basis of the proposition made coherent and sensible by this perversion of the RECORD. He further attacks "the gentleman from Maine." These are the minutes which I hold in my hand. I did not hear this speech. I was not present in the House, but I find the gentleman from New York started out thus:

Mr. Speaker, I avail myself of this opportunity to call the attention of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD], and incidentally the attention of the members of this House—

This is not an assertion that "the gentleman from Maine" was present and heard the speech. In his minutes I find in ink, in his handwriting, this statement:

Observing that the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] is with us this morning, and I am glad he is here, because I want to avail myself—

I did not hear the speech. I do not know whether he said it, but I am reading from the notes of the stenographer as corrected by him. Now, just for a moment I want to call attention to this fact, and I reach another misrepresentation on this quotation in a minute, that if the proposition read by the gentleman from New York had read in his bill and in my quotation from his bill and in his own quotation from his bill as he would now have it read, in order to make this attack upon the gentleman from Maine, it would not even then be constitutional. I am going to read from a case in a moment, because the courts have held that it is not enough to say that the evidence shall not be used against a person giving it, but that the statute must go further and provide "that no person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he may testify or produce evidence," a clause that does not even appear in the proposition of the gentleman from New York, even as interpolated and perverted by him. I read now from the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States in Brown v. Walker.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I do not understand that the gentleman is correcting the RECORD. I thought he was. I submit——

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I am not correcting the RECORD; I am simply stating a question of privilege, and I desire to have the House hear me. I do not propose to debate it; I do not propose to discuss it, but I want to state this so that the House can understand it, so that the RECORD will simply disclose the facts involved in this controversy.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to his stating a question of privilege, but I do not think he ought to undertake to prove or sustain that question of privilege by reading a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States or of any other court.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Well, I will ask unanimous consent of the House that I may be authorized to read, right at this stage of this statement, the authority of the Supreme Court of the United States on this question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent to make a statement to the House. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. In this case the court referred to the opinion in the case of Counselman against Hitchcock, construing the provision of a statute identical, substantially, in terms with that relied upon by the gentleman from New York, and the court say:

The act is supposed to have been passed in view of the opinion of this Court in Counselman v. Hitchcock (142 U. S., 547), to the effect that section 860 of the Revised Statutes, providing that no evidence given by a witness shall be used against him, his property or estate, in any manner, in any court of the United States, in any criminal proceeding, did not confer that complete protection to the witness which the amendment was intended to guarantee. The gist of that decision is contained in the following extract from the opinion of Mr. Justice Blatchford (pp. 564, 585), referring to section 860:

"It could not and would not prevent the use of his testimony to search out other testimony to be used in evidence against him or his property in a criminal proceeding in such court. It could not prevent the obtaining and use of witnesses and evidence which should be attributable directly to the testimony he might give under compulsion and on which he might be convicted, when otherwise, and if he had refused to answer, he could not possibly have been convicted." And again, "We are clearly of opinion that no statute which leaves the party or witness subject to prosecution, after he answered the criminating question put to him, can have the effect of supplanting the privilege conferred by the Constitution of the United States. Section 860 of the Revised Statntes does not supply a complete protection from all the perils against which the constitutional prohibition was designed to guard, and is not a full substitute for that prohibition. In view of the constitutional provision, a statutory enactment, to be valid, must afford absolute immunity against future prosecutions for the offense to which the question relates."

Now, I wish further to call attention to another quotation, not made from the RECORD, but made by my distinguished friend from New York, and he has here in his minutes the printed extract from the New York World, in which he made a suppression. This is the statement from the New York World:

Representative LITTLEFIELD, of Maine, the author of the antitrust bill which passed the House last Saturday, went to the White House to-day.

I did go to the White House.

He asked the President to use his influence in securing the passage of the Littlefield bill by the Senate.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD never did ask such influence.

The President refused to do so.

He never refused.

He told Mr. LITTLEFIELD that his antitrust bill was of no particular value—

He never made any such statement—was unconstitutional—

He never made any such statement, and I say here that the bill reported by the Judiciary Committee was the result of several conferences with the Attorney-General during a period of ten days or more, and the bill as reported not only was not criticised by him as unconstitutional but received his approbation as constitutional.

He said it was entirely too drastic—

He did not say that—

and that he would not indorse it.

He did not say that.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD was greatly surprised—

And here comes the erasure of three lines in the printed article. The way the article is made to read is this:

Mr. LITTLEFIELD was greatly surprised and left the White House in no good humor.

That is not true. The way the article read was:

Mr. LITTLEFIELD was greatly surprised, as the antitrust bill had previously received the indorsement of both the President and Attorney-General Knox. Mr. LITTLEFIELD left the White House in no good humor.

I want to say here, because my attention was not called to it when the gentleman on Saturday addressed the House—the suggestion that the bill now referred to was the product of an antitrust lawyer of New York—it struck me that it was hardly necessary to make any reply to that suggestion. The bill is the result of a conference, which I have just stated, with the Attorney-General of the United States, covering his points, and three men on the subcommittee, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET], the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. POWERS]; the two minority members were not in consultation with the Department of Justice, and there was no suggestion from any other party until it was reported to the Judiciary Committee on the part of the House. That is all I care to say on this question. So far as I am concerned, this controversy is now closed.

Mr. SULZER. Not quite, Mr. Speaker. [Laughter.] I ask unanimous consent to make a statement to the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to make a statement on this subject. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, we have heard the defense of the gentleman from Maine with mingled degrees of sorrow and surprise. [Laughter.] The gentleman from Maine last fall made several speeches to his constituents in Maine in which he said he would pass his identical antitrust bill or he would know the reason why. He did not pass his antitrust bill, he did not report his antitrust bill, and I suppose this is "the reason why." [Laughter.] I presume the reason will have to be satisfactory to his constituents.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I decline to be interrupted; I did not interrupt the gentleman from Maine. In regard to what he has said about myself I will simply say that it is a mere quibble on words and demonstrates the constitutional inability of the gentleman from Maine to be fair, decent, or courteous. [Laughter.] He is so puffed up with his own vanity that he can not see any good in another member, and is so self-conceited that he sees no good in any bill except his own bill—and at a critical moment abandons that, and runs away—no doubt with the hope of fighting the trusts some other day. He says he was absent last Friday when I briefly replied to him, but the RECORD shows he was present in the House. So much for that. When he read the provision in my antitrust bill which he said was unconstitutional he knew that the printer, in printing the identical bill which he read to the House, had left out one line, and when you come to read the provision he has read it is apparent to any man not an idiot that it is a very simple error on the part of the Public Printer. [Laughter.] It was subsequently corrected, but the gentleman from Maine did not read that. I did read it, however. He is not fair. He quibbles and quibbles and quibbles.

In regard now to his hairsplitting faculty relating to the constitutionality of the provision in question, I do not undertake to assume that I am as great a constitutional lawyer as the gentleman from Maine, because I do not want to make myself ludicrous. I have no doubt that he believes to-day and will have no hesitancy in asserting that Daniel Webster as a constitutional lawyer in comparison with him was a mere constitutional pigmy. I do not intend to quibble about this matter; I do not intend to split hairs about it. I am willing, as an amiable, good-natured citizen, to accept the gentleman's apology. [Laughter.] He can read decisions of the courts in regard to the constitutionality of this proposition.

I do want to say, however, Mr. Speaker, that we have in this House a few good constitutional lawyers besides the gentleman from Maine. For instance, I could mention the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN]; and the gentleman from Iowa, a great constitutional lawyer, has said that this identical provision harped on by the gentleman from Maine is constitutional. Now, I will allow the gentleman from Iowa and all the other distinguished lawyers on his committee to debate the question with the gentleman from Maine to their heart's content. But more than that, I believe that the distinguished senior Senator from the State of Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] has some reputation of being a constitutional lawyer, and he says also that this proposition is constitutional. But then, of course, they do not know as much about constitutional law as the gentleman from Maine. How could they? Perish the thought!

But I will say once more that the courts over and over again have held in the States where the statute is similar to this provision that it is constitutional. But the courts of the States, the statutes of the States, the great lawyers of the Senate, the great lawyers of this House all to the contrary notwithstanding, I am satisfied that history ultimately will say the gentleman from Maine is right, because if we go on as we are going on now we must concede that the gentleman from Maine is the only man in the United States who knows constitutional law, or Congress, the lawmaking body of the land, has got to go out of business. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, just a few words in regard to what the gentleman has said about the article I quoted from in the New York World. I quoted that word for word; and if it is not true—if the President did not tell the gentleman from Maine that his bill was unconstitutional—that is a matter between him and the correspondents of the New York World. [Laughter.] Let me say here and now that I have always found the New York World a very truthful newspaper [laughter]; and whenever its correspondents printed a statement it was generally quite true. I am sorry the gentleman from Maine has challenged the veracity of the newspaper correspondents. But they can take care of themselves. Yes, and I am sorry, too, the gentleman from Maine brought in the President's name and commented on conversations he had with the President. I never do. [Laughter.] It is hardly in good taste. But I will say this to the gentleman from Maine—that if he was so determined to report and pass his bill as he told his constituents last fall he was, he would never have consented to accept the substitute, which was as much like his original bill as the moon is like green cheese. He would have said: Before I surrender my principles on this trust question—before I go back on my promises to my constituents regarding this trust matter—I will oppose the substitute suggested by some lawyers in New York, as I have been informed. But, no; the gentleman was willing to abandon his bill and champion the unconstitutional substitute. [Laughter.]

But I am pained and surprised that he shifted the responsibility for that substitute—that "hereafter" proposition, that legislative antitrust fraud—which only relates to corporations to be organized in the future and leaves all the great trusts now organized and that are and have been preying on the people to go on and on robbing the people day in and day out forever hereafter. I was dumfounded when the gentleman from Maine made that astounding surrender. Up to that time, I admit, I had great respect for the gentleman from Maine. I thought he was honest; I thought he was earnest; I thought he was sincere on this question of the trusts. But I was mistaken. I thought after I read his speeches last fall to his constituents and to the people of the country from Maine to California that when he came back to Congress he would fearlessly insist on passing his bill or some bill like it, which would do some injury to the trusts. But I was mistaken, and when he surrendered to the trusts "that are" my faith in him was shaken—sadly and sorrowfully shaken. [Laughter.]

Now, the gentleman takes issue with the New York World;

I want to read what the World says to-day, and I want the gentleman to understand that I stand by every word in the World that I put in the RECORD formerly. [Laughter.] The World is a great independent newspaper published in my city, and its reporters are among the ablest, the most careful, and the most truthful men in the city of Washington, the gentleman from Maine to the contrary notwithstanding.

The World of this morning says:

There is no probability that it will be considered or passed.

That is, the gentleman's substitute antitrust bill now in the Senate Judiciary Committee. It is reported it will be—

Brought in partially as a rebuke to the President—

Indeed! So we see the Senators are going to "rebuke" the President just the same as the gentleman from Maine has done—but the President can stand it. And it goes on—who [that is, the President] characterized the Hoar bill as worthless, and the Littlefield bill as unconstitutional.

Here it is repeated again, and I suppose the gentleman will rise up again and deny it. But, sir, I never said the gentleman's bill was unconstitutional. I would not have the audacity to take on my shoulders that gigantic responsibility. My remarks in regard to the gentleman's substitute bill are printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and my reply to his remarks regarding my bill and my remarks in regard to himself are printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. And I stand by—and I want him to distinctly understand that I stand by—every word that I have said in this debate; and I stand by every word I am saying now, and I can keep this up just so long as the gentleman from Maine wants it kept up. I never run away. I do not look for trouble, but I am not afraid of the gentleman's heroic quibbles on words, words, words. The gentleman from Maine is a good deal like some other people I have had the fortune or misfortune to come in contact with during my few brief years on this mundane sphere. [Laughter.] They bark and get bitten, and then they whine. The gentleman from Maine barked. I think it sufficiently appears to-day that he got bitten and is now whining—whining against me, but not so much against me as he is whining against the fates, and not so much against the fates as he is whining here to square his conduct with his promises to his constituents. I am content. My skin is intact.

Let the galled jade wince, my withers are unwrung.

[Laughter and applause.]

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I just want to make one statement.

The SPEAKER. It will have to be by unanimous consent.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Well, I ask unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that he may make one statement. Is there objection?

Mr. SULZER. I think we ought to let him complete his statement, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. It is only one statement and that is this: I can not stop to go over all the misrepresentations and misstatements made by the gentleman from New York. When he says that I knew that this language which is in controversy had been omitted by the Public Printer, he states what he knows is not true. I did not know it when I made the speech on Saturday. The first moment I ever received any intimation in relation to that fact was in the area of this House this morning, when it was made to me by the gentleman from New York himself, and I never heard that he had introduced a second bill containing this correction until this morning, before the session of the House. With that I leave it.

JAMES JONES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House an amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12508) granting an increase of pension to James Jones.

Mr. SULLOWAY. I move to concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

ANHEUSER-BUSCH BREWING ASSOCIATION, ST. LOUIS, MO.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a Senate amendment to the bill (H. R. 9063) to refund certain taxes paid by the Anheuser-Busch Brewing Association, of St. Louis, Mo.

Mr. GRAFF. I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. TALBERT, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. MCDERMOTT, for two days, on account of important business.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent, on motion of Mr. MERCER, the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 17424) for the conveyance of public lands belonging to the United States, and the same was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania calls up a privileged report, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules, to whom was referred House resolution No. 448, have had the same under consideration and hereby report the following in lieu thereof:

"Resolved, That it shall be in order to consider, in the bill (H. R. 17288) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes, legislation providing for increase of midshipmen, officers, and men in the line, staff corps, and Marine Corps of the Navy, and increase of limit of cost in reconstruction of Naval Academy; and it shall be in order to have a separate vote in the House, if the same be demanded, upon each of the foregoing subjects."

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, if I can have order, I will state that the bill referred to in the resolution just read——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I think the gentleman ought to move the previous question, or will he give us a little time?

Mr. DALZELL. I will give the gentleman time.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I suggest to the gentleman to move the previous question. Then both sides will have time.

Mr. DALZELL. Then I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, the bill referred to in the resolution just read is the naval appropriation bill. That bill contains, as reported to the House, several items that are clearly subject to a point of order. In other words, it contains new legislation. I am willing to concede that under ordinary circumstances legislation ought not to be provided for upon a general appropriation bill, but such a rule is sometimes justified by emergencies, and in this case we think it clearly so justified. The two items referred to in the resolution are, first, the increase of the personnel of the Navy, and, secondly, the increase of the limit of cost for the construction of the Naval Academy. Very briefly I will call the attention of the House to what the Secretary of the Navy says upon those two subjects in his last report. With respect to the first he says:

The most imperative need of the Navy to-day is of additional officers. I can not overstate this need. It invites the instant attention of Congress. The administration of the Department is embarrassed almost daily by the lack of officers below command rank. This condition has been approaching for some years, and was clearly apprehended and stated by my predecessor in office. It is acute to-day, and when the ships already authorized are completed it will be desperate unless there is early action.

Now, it is in answer to that demand from the Secretary of the Navy that the first item of the resolution is inserted. With respect to the second, the Secretary calls attention to the fact that certain improvements authorized by Congress, amongst others the construction of a hospital, will have to be abandoned for the present unless the limit of cost be increased. He says, furthermore, that the entire work will have to be abandoned for the present unless the limit of cost is increased. That is owing to the increase in the cost of material and increase in the cost of labor. He also gives us notice that he will not continue the work until the matter has been submitted to and received the consideration of Congress. I will submit at length what he says on this subject:

The act for rebuilding the Naval Academy, approved June, 1900, authorized the expenditure of $8,000,000 and provided that plans, covering the entire improvements, should be adopted by the Secretary before any part of said sum should be expended.

The Secretary approved plans October 3, 1900, and allotted such sums for the several buildings and improvements contemplated as would cover $8,000,000, reserving $390,000 as a contingent fund.

The act of July, 1902, appropriating for the improvements at the Academy in accordance with these plans, authorized the building of a hospital at a cost not to exceed $100,000, and additional dredging at a cost of $200,000, and further provided that the cost of such hospital and dredging should be paid out of said $8,000,000. As in obedience to the law my predecessor had allotted the $8,000,000 prescribed as the limit of cost of the improvements at the Academy, it is impossible to execute the provisions for the erection of a hospital and for dredging without exhausting the fund reserved for contingencies, which is already sufficiently small.

Accordingly these two improvements will not be undertaken without further authority from Congress. But a still more serious question has arisen. The architect in charge of the improvements reports, after careful investigation, that the cost of labor and material to be used in the buildings and improvements not already under contract has increased more than 30 per cent since the original plans were adopted. It has therefore become impracticable to proceed further in the execution of the general plan without largely exceeding the limit of cost prescribed by Congress. No further contracts will be entered into until the subject is submitted to Congress and its will ascertained.

It is for the reasons given that the two items are inserted in this resolution. But that the House may have an opportunity to pass upon the matter as though it were general legislation, there is a provision in the rule that when the bill comes into the House a separate vote can be had upon these items.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I will take only a moment or two. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has correctly stated the effect of this rule. It is to make in order two amendments, two provisions in the naval appropriation bill, one of them providing for an increase of midshipmen, officers and men in the line, staff corps, and Marine Corps of the Navy, and the other an increase of the limit of cost in the construction of the Naval Academy; that is, permitting that increase from $8,000,000 to $10,000,000. The objection the minority members of the Committee on Rules have to this rule is that it provides this important legislation upon a general appropriation bill, in defiance of the plain rules of this House. Your rules say we shall not legislate on a general appropriation bill. You come and by this rule you break down your own well-established rules and permit this important legislation on this general appropriation bill.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we say that it ought not to be done. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] says that ordinarily it ought not to be done, but he says there are reasons for it now. What are those reasons? Why, he reads from the report of the Secretary of the Navy certain recommendations in respect to these two provisions. That report of the Secretary of the Navy was presented to Congress at the beginning of this session, in the month of December, and yet we have been here through the month of December and the month of January and seventeen days of the month of February, and now, within twelve legislative days of the adjournment, the gentleman comes in and puts into a general appropriation bill these provisions.

If these provisions are necessary to the proper promotion and advancement of the Navy and its expansion, why were they not presented in a bill for that purpose by the Naval Committee two months and a half ago? The Secretary of the Navy said they were necessary then, and they are no more necessary now than they were then. For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, we think the rule is unwise and improvident. We shall not attempt to call the yeas and nays on the passage of the rule. There is this provision in the rule, and it is a saving clause. It permits the House of Representatives to vote upon these two propositions and to have a yea and nay vote thereon, if it is desirable. I am not going to express any opinion as to the desirability or nondesirability of the two provisions. I shall leave that to the minority members as well as the majority of the Committee on Naval Affairs. I am content, Mr. Speaker, with what I have said and yield five minutes of my time to the gentleman from Alabama, my colleague on the committee, Mr. UNDERWOOD.

Mr. DALZELL. Before the gentleman sits down, will he permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. DALZELL. Did not the gentleman in the Committee on Rules and in the House not more than a week ago vote for the rule authorizing general legislation on the sundry civil appropriation bill?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Yes; I think I did. But that is a wholly different proposition to that which is made here. I do not think the gentleman from Pennsylvania has any right to tell what occurred in the Committee on Rules. [Laughter.]

Mr. DALZELL. I am not. I am asking you the question. I am leaving it to you to tell. [Laughter.]

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama five minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I originally understood when I came to this House that the legislation of the House would be first considered by appropriate committees to which it was referred and then considered in an orderly way in the House of Representatives. Now, I think this rule is for the independence and rights of every member on the floor of this House. Here is a great committee, one of the greatest committees of this House, that has been in session since last November, with every one of these propositions that they now propose to put on this appropriation bill as riders laid before that committee on the 1st of December. Last fall the recommendations were made there by the Secretary of the Navy insisting on their action. They had the right and it was their duty to this House to consider these propositions and report favorably or unfavorably and place these reports on the Calendar.

The Naval Committee can not say they would not have had an opportunity to properly and orderly consider this legislation. Every committee of this House has had its day in court in this session of Congress. Some committees that have not thought they had sufficient time under the ordinary procedure on the call of the committees have been granted special days by the Committee on Rules for the consideration of legislation coming from their committees. No one can deny that if the Naval Committee, with important and proper legislation reported, if this House had been asked for a special day to consider the bills coming from that committee, that they would not have been given ample and sufficient time. But they have not done it.

Mr. FOSS. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. FOSS. Was the gentleman from Alabama, like his colleague from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON], in favor of legislation on the sundry civil bill?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I did not have the privilege of being in the Committee on Rules or in the House when the proposition was up. If that is the information the gentleman desires, he has it.

Mr. FOSS. Did the gentleman make a speech on the floor?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I was not here. Unfortunately, I was sick at home.

Mr. FOSS. Conveniently absent.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I deny that. If I have anything of which I can congratulate myself on since I have had a seat upon the floor, it has been that I have expressed my views on any subject before it. I was confined to my bed by sickness on that day.

But I do not believe in this class of legislation. Now, I say I do not mean to criticise the chairman of the committee, because he is personally my friend. He has worked hard, he and his committee, and it is not a personal criticism that I am making of the Naval Committee, but reaching out to all the great appropriation committees. Instead of bringing in legislation in an orderly and proper way, they save it up and launch it in an appropriation bill, and the House is then required to swallow it or not swallow it. It has got to take it as a whole, and it is bringing about a vicious class of legislation in making one set of members vote for a proposition because they have something in it. It is intended that the legislation of this House should be considered separately and each branch stand on its own merits. It is a question of continually reporting legislative matters on appropriation bills which should be orderly considered.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to have about two minutes more.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I yield two minutes more to my colleague.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Have them considered under the five-minute rule, which gives a fair opportunity for consideration by the members of this House.

Now, I say to the membership of this House, and especially to the minority, that if you want your rights protected you have got to maintain the rules of this House. The rules of this House are intended for the protection of the minority, and when you come to the condition that you are going to allow the rules to be broken down, and especially this rule that is for the greatest protection of the minority and protection of the members of the House who are not on the great appropriation committees; when you allow them to be infringed and broken down you are trampling on your own rights and the rights of your constituencies and very much minimizing the opportunity that you have to represent your constituents here on the floor and be effective in the legislation of the country. For that reason I shall vote against this rule. I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania want to use a portion of his time?

Mr. DALZELL. I do not know whether I do or not.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Then I want to yield three minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], a member of the committee.

Mr. DALZELL. How do I understand the gentleman?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I want to yield three minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina. If we are to stop now, I will not take any further time.

Mr. DALZELL. I do not want to commit myself.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Then, if the gentleman is willing for debate to close, it can close now.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was adopted.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the naval appropriation bill, and pending that I will ask my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TATE], whether or not he desires at this time to agree upon the closing of general debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 17288, the naval appropriation bill, and pending that motion desires to reach some decision in regard to the closing of general debate.

Mr. TATE. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that we go on for the present. I do not think we will take a great deal of time on this side for general debate.

The motion of Mr. FOSS was agreed to; accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union (with Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts in the chair).

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 17288) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes, and the Clerk will read the bill.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to take up the attention of the committee with any long explanation of this bill. I have carefully prepared a report giving the different items in the bill, which any member can read if he cares to, and which makes, I think, a reasonable explanation of all of the important provisions. The estimates that were submitted by the Secretary of the Navy to the House and by the Speaker referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs amounted in all to $82,426,000. I am speaking in round numbers. There were added supplemental estimates to the amount of $1,126,000, and additional estimates came in after this to the amount of $1,602,000, making in all a total in the amount of estimates submitted to the committee for its consideration by the Navy Department of $85,154,809.59.

Now, the committee, after careful consideration of these estimates, having before it at different times the bureau chiefs and the Secretary of the Navy, saw fit to reduce the estimate by the amount of $6,142,089.43. So that this bill which is under consideration to-day by this committee carries in round numbers $79,048,000. This is about $200,000 more than the naval appropriation act of last year.

Now, there are a few important matters in connection with this bill to which I desire to call the attention of the committee. The most important thing, perhaps, is the provision for the increase in the personnel. Every member of this committee must realize that as we go on with the building up of our Navy and with the construction of new ships we must necessarily add to the personnel. We must have more men and more officers. We have at the present time about 26,000 enlisted men in the Navy. When our present ships now building are completed we will need 40,000 men in the Navy. It has been the policy of the committee to increase year by year the number of men so that by the time of the completion of these ships which have already been authorized we will have a personnel, so far as the men are concerned, which is adequate to thoroughly man the ships.

In this bill is a provision for the increase in the number of men by 3,000. Now, as regards the officers, there is perhaps no more important provision in this bill than the provision for the increase of officers. The Secretary of the Navy has called the attention of Congress to it in his able report. That has been alluded to in the discussion upon the question of the rule here this morning by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. The Secretary of the Navy in his report says that we have reached a critical condition and we must have more officers, not only in the line, but in the staff. In his hearing before the committee he emphasized it. He says:

> From the very moment I entered the office the most embarrassing daily question of administration has been to supply officers for the needs of the service. We have taken men from one duty and put them upon another often when we realized that we might be impairing the service by removing a man from his present situation of duty.
> Then it became a balance of advantages, or a balance of disadvantages, as you might term it. As I have stated, we have not officers enough at the present time to man three-quarters of our present serviceable ships. And that condition will grow worse as the new ships come into commission.

Now, in the report which I have submitted to the House, I have called particular attention to this subject. Gentlemen will find in that report a table showing our present condition. To-day we have a deficiency of 577 in the number of officers. When we have completed the ships which are now under construction, we shall need 498 more officers; and if you add to those 125 as a proper allowance for officers in transit, on shore duty, and on leave, then you will find that at the end of four years, when our ships now under construction are completed, there will be a total deficiency of 1,360 officers.

The committee every year have been calling the attention of the House to this matter. Last year we recommended a provision to increase the number of naval cadets by 500, but it went out upon a point of order here in this House. This year, however, the committee have come back with renewed vigor and desire to be all the more emphatic upon this question and say here to this Committee of the Whole, "Unless you provide for an increase in the number of officers you ought to stop the construction of ships, because you will not have men to officer those ships." What is the necessity of building up the Navy unless you propose to use your ships?

In this bill we have made provision for doubling the number of midshipmen in our Naval Academy, so that each member of Congress shall have an appointment once in two years instead of once in four years. That is one provision that we have recommended in order to meet this alarming situation.

Mr. RIXEY. Does not the gentleman think there ought to be a limitation of the time during which this provision in regard to doubling the number of cadets shall continue to operate?

Mr. FOSS. I would say to my friend that Congress will be in session in the years to come, and it can at any time cut off this provision or otherwise reduce the number of midshipmen as we may see fit. We have not fixed any limitation here. At first I thought there ought perhaps to be a limitation, say, of twelve years, but Congress can at any time make any reduction in the number that may be deemed necessary.

Mr. RIXEY. Can the gentleman tell me whether or not the Secretary of the Navy has recommended that there be such a limitation? I am under the impression that he has so recommended.

Mr. FOSS. I do not recollect that anywhere in his hearing. If the gentleman can recall any such recommendation, I shall be glad if he will refer me to it.

Mr. METCALF. Has the committee considered the question of doing away with the two years' sea cruise and commissioning midshipmen immediately upon graduation?

Mr. FOSS. No, sir.

Mr. METCALF. Does not the gentleman think that ought to be done?

Mr. FOSS. As the gentleman knows, that question was under consideration, I think, last year and two years before, and I do not know but the year before that. But there has not come to the committee any recommendation of that kind from the Department this year, and we did not give the subject any consideration. I may say, however, that I think the House is favorable to that proposition, because it has been carried through here on two occasions.

Mr. METCALF. That would place the midshipmen on the same footing as the cadets at West Point.

Mr. FOSS. In order to relieve the situation as to the deficiency in our number of officers, the committee has recommended—

> Second. The appointment of 12 ensigns from the warrant officers each calendar year, under the restrictions imposed by existing law.
> Third. The appointment of 30 additional lieutenant-commanders and 50 additional lieutenants (of whom not more than 25 per cent shall be appointed in each of said grades during one calendar year) and such increase in the grades of lieutenant (junior grade) and ensign as may qualify under existing law and the provisions of this act.
> Fourth. The appointment of 30 additional surgeons with the rank of lieutenant-commander and 120 additional passed assistant and assistant surgeons with the rank, respectively, of lieutenant and lieutenant (junior grade), of whom not more than 25 assistant surgeons shall be appointed in one year.
> Fifth. The appointment of 2 additional pay inspectors, 36 additional paymasters, 26 passed assistant and assistant paymasters, of whom not more than 20 assistant paymasters shall be appointed each year.
> Sixth. The appointment of 29 additional naval constructors and assistant naval constructors, of whom not more than 5 assistant naval constructors shall be appointed in any one year.
> Seventh. The appointment of 1 additional civil engineer and 12 assistant civil engineers, of whom not more than 3 assistant civil engineers shall be appointed in any one year.
> Eighth. The following increase of officers and men in the Marine Corps: 1 colonel, 1 lieutenant-colonel, 5 majors, 12 captains, 25 first lieutenants, 12 second lieutenants, 1 assistant adjutant and inspector with the rank of lieutenant-colonel, 2 assistant adjutants and inspectors with the rank of major, 1 assistant quartermaster with the rank of lieutenant-colonel, 5 assistant quartermasters with the rank of captain, 1 assistant paymaster with the rank of lieutenant-colonel, 1 assistant paymaster with the rank of captain, 1 sergeant-major, 40 quartermaster-sergeants, 12 first sergeants, 65 sergeants, 55 corporals, 10 drummers, 10 trumpeters, and 527 privates.

These are the recommendations which are proposed by the Committee on Naval Affairs in order to meet the condition which is spoken of by the Secretary of the Navy in his report, and also referred to more emphatically in his hearing before the committee, to relieve the present dearth of officers and the prospective deficiency which will occur in the next few years unless we make some provision now.

Mr. STEELE. I should like to inquire whether the various additional officers that the gentleman has enumerated are to be appointed from the Navy, or, if not all, how many of them and from what class? Is it provided that civilians shall be appointed?

Mr. FOSS. Well, in the Marine Corps they are taken from civil life when the supply from the Academy has been exhausted.

Mr. STEELE. And the rest, the engineer officers and the pay officers, are they to come from the Navy?

Mr. FOSS. They would be taken from civil life.

Mr. HULL. Let me put one question to the gentleman from Illinois. Has he or his committee ever considered the advisability of bringing in legislation independently of the appropriation bill? I see that this bill is full of new legislation. In other words, you concentrate all the legislation for the Navy and the Marine Corps on an appropriation bill. I should like to suggest that it is impossible for Congress to give very much consideration to it in that way, and to ask if the gentleman has not considered the advisability of doing as the other committees do—bring in these measures as independent measures, so that they may be considered without tying up the appropriation bill or being subject to a point of order?

Mr. FOSS. I would say to my friend from Iowa that the committee considered that matter, and they are of the opinion that it is better and wiser to have these matters considered by special bills, rather than upon the appropriation bill; but this year, owing to the pressure which has been upon the committee for the consideration of many matters, it was deemed advisable to ask the Committee on Rules for a rule allowing the consideration of this matter, which was so important and so pressing, and the Committee on Rules reported this morning, probably in the absence of the gentleman, and passed a rule allowing a consideration of the increase in the number of officers, in connection with this bill. But as to the general proposition which the gentleman advances, I believe that our appropriation bills should be kept as free as possible from new legislation. I think that is the opinion of the committee.

Mr. HULL. I am glad of it.

Mr. FOSS. Now, Mr. Chairman, there is one other matter to which I would like to call the attention of the House, and that is a matter which is perhaps of greater interest to the people at large in the consideration of this bill than anything else, and that is the naval programme.

This year the committee recommend the building of three first-class seagoing battle ships, one armored cruiser, and two training ships. The cost of these vessels when completed will amount in round numbers to about $30,000,000. This is about the same programme in size as the one which passed the House last year in the naval appropriation act. But you will recall, however, that instead of three battle ships we provided for two battle ships last year, and instead of one armored cruiser asked for this year, we provided for two.

Now, I do not know that I care to say anything further in relation to the appropriation bill at this time, but as these different provisions come up in the course of debate, I shall be pleased to give what little information I possess to the members of the committee, if called upon.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I will ask my colleague upon the committee [Mr. TATE] if he is ready to go on with the general debate.

Papers were presented by Mr. FOSS as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY, BUREAU OF NAVIGATION,
OFFICE OF NAVAL INTELLIGENCE,
Washington, D. C., January 2, 1903.

DEAR SIR: Referring to your letter of December 17, 1902, requesting a statement as to foreign naval programmes, I have the honor to forward herewith the desired memorandum. In addition, I forward a printed list showing the number and displacement of vessels of different classes, built and building, for the principal naval powers, which has been corrected up to November 30, 1902.

A valuable chart showing graphically the policy of the leading naval powers of building ships in homogeneous groups or otherwise, has been sent to the Scientific American for publication and will probably reach you in due time.

Very respectfully,

C. D. SIGSBEE,
Chief Intelligence Officer.

Hon. GEORGE EDMUND FOSS, M. C.,
Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MEMORANDUM OF INFORMATION—FOREIGN NAVAL PROGRAMMES.

OFFICE OF NAVAL INTELLIGENCE,
January 2, 1903.

Hon. GEORGE EDMUND FOSS, M. C.,
Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs, House of Representatives:

Austria.—Three battle ships of 10,600 tons displacement each are proposed. One of these has been laid down. The budget of 1902-3 includes 2 monitors for the defense of the Danube, and 5 patrol boats.

England.—The new vessels authorized by the budget of 1902-3 are 2 battle ships, 2 armored cruisers, 2 third-class cruisers, 4 scouts, 9 destroyers, 4 torpedo boats, and 4 submarines.

France.—The new vessels authorized are 1 battle ship, 2 armored cruisers, 2 destroyers, and 16 torpedo boats. In addition, material was to be ordered for 3 battle ships to be laid down in 1903, and orders were to be placed for 13 submarines, with the understanding that they should not be begun until 1903. A change in the ministry of marine resulted in the countermanding of the order for the 3 battle ships to be laid down in 1903, and the matter is still in abeyance. Public opinion is in favor of their being reinserted in the budget.

Germany.—The new vessels authorized are 2 battle ships, 1 armored cruiser, 3 small cruisers, 1 gunboat (extra to programme), 1 division (6) of destroyers, and 1 gunboat for service in Chinese rivers.

Italy.—The Italian budget for 1902-3 provides for the laying down of 3 battle ships, 2 colliers, 2 destroyers, 1 submarine, 4 seagoing torpedo boats, and 1 repair ship.

Japan.—The programme for new construction in Japan is at present confined to cruisers and torpedo boats, to be built at home yards. A new building programme, covering the period 1904-1907, and now under consideration, provides for 4 battle ships, 2 armored cruisers, 4 protected cruisers, 15 torpedo boat destroyers, and 50 torpedo boats.

Russia.—No plan has been formed for the building of new ships beyond the carrying out of the programme of 1899. There have been laid down under this programme 7 battle ships, of which 6 have been launched. There are now building in Russian shipyards 5 protected cruisers, of which 4 have been launched.

C. D. SIGSBEE.
Chief Intelligence Officer.

Mr. FOSS. Now, Mr. Chairman, I will ask my colleague upon the committee [Mr. TATE] if he is ready to go on with the general debate?

Mr. TATE. I ask that my colleague on the committee [Mr. RIXEY] be recognized.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. DALZELL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bill and joint resolution of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 6212. An act to compensate the Old Point Comfort Improvement Company for the demolition and removal of the Hygeia Hotel property from the Government reservation at Old Point, Virginia; and

S. R. 159. Joint resolution granting to the New York and New Jersey Railroad Company the right to construct and operate an underground railway under land owned by the United States in the city of New York.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to bills of the following titles:

S. 4443. An act granting an increase of pension to Thomas Bassett;

S. 6063. An act granting an increase of pension to Orson Nickerson;

S. 6370. An act granting an increase of pension to Alice F. Smalley; and

S. 6653. An act granting a pension to Halvor Paulsen; and

S. 7207. An act granting an increase of pension to May Mosher Chase.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15659) granting a pension to Elise Sigel.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 12098) to amend section 1 of the act of Congress approved May 14, 1898, entitled "An act extending the homestead laws and providing for a right of way for railroads in the district of Alaska," disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House, and had appointed Mr. CLARK of Wyoming, Mr. GAMBLE, and Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendment bill of the following title in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 15804. An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 17247. An act granting a pension to Mary H. Rumple; and

H. R. 15767. An act to authorize Washington and Westmoreland counties, in the State of Pennsylvania, to construct and maintain a bridge across the Monongahela River, in the State of Pennsylvania.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendment bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 15520. An act to establish a standard of value and to provide for a coinage system in the Philippine Islands.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Chairman, the large amount carried by this bill, $79,000,000, does not, I think, indicate that the limit of expenditure for the naval establishment has been reached. The bill now carries about three times as great an amount as it did prior to the Spanish war, and notwithstanding the large amount it seems to me that the bills in the future will carry still larger appropriations.

This is made manifest by the fact that this bill provides for doubling the number of cadets at Annapolis, and that it provides for doubling the Medical Corps. It provides for adding 50 per cent to the Paymaster Corps, 40 per cent to the Construction Corps, and it provides for an increase of officers in the higher grades.

In addition to this, it provides for an increase in the number of men in the Navy, as well as increase in the number of men and officers in the Marine Corps.

The rapid rate at which appropriations in the Navy have increased is well illustrated by a statement given us by the Bureau of Ordnance. Admiral O'Neil, the head of that Bureau, when before that committee, stated that in 1892 and 1893 the appropriation for the Ordnance Bureau, which did not include anything for construction or repair, was $180,000; for 1893 and 1894 it was $200,000; and it remained at $200,000 until 1898 and 1899, while now the appropriation is $1,500,000.

The rapid increase in expenditures for the Navy Department is also shown by the first three statements in the report of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs. Under "Pay of the Navy," the estimates were $17,816,099, while the amount carried by this bill is $18,361,099.10. Under "Bureau of Navigation," the estimates were $1,157,125, while the amount carried in the bill is $1,575,723. Under "Bureau of Ordnance," the estimates were for $2,761,006.75, while the bill carries $3,061,006.75. In other words, the estimates made up to the 1st of December did not keep pace with the requirements for the appropriations, and the bill made up in January carries for a number of these bureaus larger appropriations than were estimated for.

It is therefore manifest that we have to meet increased expenditures for the Navy in the future. This bill provides under the head of increase in the Navy, which applies more especially to the number of ships authorized, for three battle ships, one armored cruiser, and three smaller ships. It is a fact, Mr. Chairman, that we have already completed 9 battle ships of the first class and 1 of the second class, and 2 armored cruisers. It is a striking fact that we are now building under authorizations already had as many battle ships as we have in commission. In other words, we are now building 10 battle ships, which will cost $75,000,000; we are now building 8 armored cruisers, whereas we have only 2 completed. These 8 will cost us $60,000,000, and the smaller craft now building will bring the grand total of cost up, for ships now building, to not less than $150,000,000. It is true that a portion of this money has been paid; but from the reports of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs I take it that we still owe upon the authorizations for ships now building over $100,000,000.

My view of this matter is that we can well wait until December before we authorize any more great ships. Two years ago in the short session of Congress the Committee on Naval Affairs brought in its bill, recommending the building of 2 battleships and 2 armored cruisers. I opposed the provision at that time, believing that we could well wait until the incoming Congress. Upon an amendment by the Senate that provision was struck out, and the Navy Department was instructed to furnish plans to the next session of Congress for these great ships. These ships were authorized, and for a short time thereafter it seemed to be the opinion of the people in authority that we would not authorize at this session of Congress any of these great ships.

I remember when the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House and the chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee of the Senate and the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. DAYTON] an influential member of the majority on the House Naval Affairs Committee, all gave out interviews during the maneuvers at Newport, R. I., in which they gave it as their opinion that Congress ought only to authorize the building of these great ships once during the life of a Congress, and that during the long session. I thought, after these interviews from these distinguished gentlemen, that we would not have this proposition here during the short session. I am somewhat at a loss to understand why it should now be insisted that, notwithstanding the fact that we are building ships costing $150,000,000, and are practically already doubling the number of great ships, as well as men, we must at this time authorize the building of four battle ships, because the armored cruiser costs as much as a battle ship and is such in everything except name.

We are told, in some places, that it is because of the Venezuelan incident. Why, Mr. Chairman, Germany sent only a cruiser there. Great Britain sent only a cruiser there. Tell me that we are to be frightened by a cruiser from a foreign country going to South American countries? In my judgment we have at this time as good a Navy as any upon the face of the earth; and I believe we are building now as fast as any other country except Great Britain. We have heard, in some places, a great deal said about the naval prowess of Germany, and it seems to me an effort has been made to prejudice the people of this country against that great people. Advantage seems to have been taken of the fact that Germany is increasing her navy to make it appear that she has designs upon this country. It is a well-known fact that so far as Great Britain is concerned she is bound to us by many ties which can not well be broken, and, so far as I am able to judge, there is no greater danger from Germany or any other foreign country than there is from Great Britain.

But what is the armament of Germany? I have here a statement taken from the Philadelphia Inquirer of February 12, 1903. That paper has always been a consistent advocate of a great building programme for the Navy. This statement shows a few figures which will suffice to make the situation clear:

The German Naval Yearbook is good authority upon the question, and in its edition for 1902 it publishes some statistics which are to the point. Only battle ships and cruisers of over 5,000 tons not launched prior to 1882 are included.

By 1906 England will have 57 battle ships, 52 of them over 10,000 tons, with an aggregate displacement of 765,750 tons, and 70 large cruisers, 29 protected, with an aggregate displacement of 648,440 tons. This would make the aggregate tonnage of the battle ships and cruisers comprised in the British navy 1,414,190 tons. Now, look at the Navy of the United States:

Assuming that the programme which has been adopted is fully carried out, this country by the year 1906 will have 20 battle ships, 19 of them over 10,000 tons, which will aggregate 248,294 tons, and 16 cruisers, 13 protected, aggregating 176,155 tons. The total tonnage of the United States Navy will then be 424,449, or considerably less than one-third the tonnage of the navy of Great Britain. France with 32 battle ships and 28 cruisers, and Russia with 25 battle ships and 18 cruisers, will be ahead of us, while Germany, with 19 battle ships and 11 cruisers, will not be far behind. It must be remembered, however, that the German naval programme will not have been carried out as soon as 1906. When it shall have been executed, Germany at the present rate of progress will be ahead. At this time that country and the United States as respects their naval strength stand close together, each being materially behind Great Britain, Russia, and France.

We have now already completed 10 battle ships. We are building 10 more and 8 armored cruisers. In other words, we are building 18 great war ships, and I do not believe that there is any other nation, with the exception, possibly, of Great Britain, which has as many of such ships now building.

Something has been said about the opinion of the honorable Secretary of the Navy. The Secretary of the Navy, in regard to this building programme, when asked his opinion, stated that it was simply a question with him as to whose opinion he should adopt. He said:

Oh, of course, when I talk about my opinion it is a question of whose opinion I should take or adopt. I can not have any opinion that is worth very much. Having looked the whole question over, I think the opinion of the board is correct that we ought to duplicate the programme. There are many officers who believe that instead of building battle ships of the Connecticut type of 16,000 tons we should build them of 12,000 or 13,000 tons of the Maine type. If this committee wishes to modify it in that respect, I have no objection.

I have seen it stated if these ships are authorized it is the intention of the Department to build them upon the identical plans which were adopted two years ago. I am not in favor of continuing the building of great battle ships upon old plans. I believe there ought to be some improvement, and my judgment is that instead of adopting this provision directing the building of these ships we ought to call upon the Navy Department for plans and specifications upon which the ships can be authorized at the next session of Congress.

This bill provides for battle ships which shall be of 16,000 tons displacement. The Secretary of the Navy says that the Department is divided in its opinion as to whether we ought to build the 16,000-ton battle ships or types of the 12,000 or 13,000 ton.

I would ask, Mr. Chairman, why this great haste in the building of battle ships? We have been going on year after year authorizing the building of battle ships and making no provision for officers for these ships. It takes as long to educate an officer as it does to build a battle ship. For many years we have authorized no officers; but almost every year we are authorizing the building of great battle ships. Why is it? I do not know; but this is a significant fact, that for four great ships an appropriation of $30,000,000 is required, and that the $30,000,000 go practically to two sources—about one-half to the shipbuilders and the other half to the armor-plate manufacturers. Year after year we authorize the ships and make the great appropriations. But after these great ships are authorized there does not seem to be any very great haste in their completion.

From the report of the Chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair I find that the battle ship Maine was seventeen months over her contract limit for completion. I find that the Missouri is already twenty months behind. I find that the Ohio is twenty-nine months behind the contract limit. I find that the Virginia is thirteen months behind. I find that the Nebraska is ten months, the Georgia twelve months, and the New Jersey ten months behind, and so on with other ships.

Furthermore, I find from the hearings that there is a penalty of $300 a day attached to the contract for a failure to complete within the time, but Admiral Bowles, Chief of Construction and Repair, says that this penalty has never been enforced, and yet we are year after year authorizing the building of ships. We can not delay for six months for fear, forsooth, some disaster may happen to this country! Yet after the contract is let these contractors are anywhere from ten to twenty months behind in the time for the completion of their contracts.

So long as this is the case, is there any necessity for this great and ill-considered haste in the authorization of battle ships? My own view is to wait until December and begin with the new Congress upon plans to be furnished us, and then decide what shall be the number of ships to be then authorized. I know, however, Mr. Chairman, that my protest in this respect amounts to nothing I very well remember that two years ago the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, stated that while he would support the authorization for ships carried by that bill, in his judgment when those ships were authorized we would then have reached, in his opinion, the size of the Navy that was necessary for the needs of this country. And yet, since that time, with no justification for change of opinion, I believe that the overwhelming sentiment of this House is not only for these ships carried in this bill, but for the continuation of this programme almost indefinitely.

My own judgment is that we have built and are building as fast as, if not faster than, the needs of the Government require. With 20 battle ships, 10 armored cruisers, and a great number of smaller fighting craft, we have already as great a navy as this country requires. To man and officer these ships it will take, including the Marine Corps, about 50,000 men.

I do not care, Mr. Chairman, to say more on this subject. I realize that my views are not in this respect in accord with the majority of this House, but being convinced that there is no more necessity for a navy of more than 50,000 men than there is for an army of more than 50,000 men, I shall vote at this time against the authorization of these great battle ships. [Applause.] Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DAYTON. Mr. Chairman, in the absence of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSS], the chairman of the committee, and acting in his stead, I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ADAMS].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois did not consume the whole of his time, and the Chair will recognize anyone to whom the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. DAYTON] may assign the floor.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Chairman, as one of the Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, representing this House on the board of that institution, I take this, the first, opportunity to reply to some remarks made during the consideration of the sundry civil bill by the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] relating to that institution, its management, and the various scientific bureaus under its control.

The gentleman prefaced his remarks with a confession that he was a novice on that committee, and he undertook, as he said, simply to give the impressions which he had gained during the first year of his service. Had the gentleman used his "new broom" to stir up a little dust which may have accumulated on the machinery of the Smithsonian Institute, I should have been in hearty sympathy with him; for I am frank to confess that under the management of the amiable gentleman, as he described the distinguished secretary who presides over that institution, I think, and confess as a member of the board, that there is some ground for criticism. But the gentleman left the dust still settled in the various cracks and crevices, and attacked the institution as a whole, together with the object and utility of the various bureaus under its jurisdiction. I am somewhat surprised at such criticism coming from a gentleman who is an accomplished graduate of two of New England's most distinguished colleges—surprised that he should have seen fit to criticise the "uselessness" of science, and take the position that the institution should neither be encouraged nor supported by the Government's supervision or appropriations for that purpose.

The gentleman said:

> There is another whole series of expenditures which attracted my attention in the appropriations for the Geological Survey and the Smithsonian Museum. I confess it does not seem to me that such expenditures are warranted for scientific researches which do not promise any direct material advantage.

Mr. Chairman, it was my great privilege to be a member of the Geological Survey for five years. I was there a long time ago—over thirty years—when the preliminary explorations and surveys were opening up the great Territories then of Idaho, Montana, Wyoming, Utah, New Mexico, and Colorado.

Sir, there never was money expended by the United States that ever brought back such material returns as the money that was expended in that survey. It directed attention to and opened up the agricultural lands and the mining regions—pointed them out to those who were about to take their course westward and settle. Those territories have now become great and flourishing States, guided and directed to a great extent by the reports that were furnished by that "useless" geological survey. Why, Mr. Chairman, the results are simply colossal. It is not necessary for me to dwell upon them when I am addressing Representatives sitting here from the very States whose settlement, when they were but Territories, was guided under the exploration and practical information of this survey.

I am afraid to turn to the exploration of the Yellowstone Park, which has preserved those great physical wonders to our country, because the practical gentleman from Massachusetts would have no sympathy with the pleasure and the instruction obtained for our people by preserving the wonders and the fast dying out species of game in that park. I will ask him to turn his view from the curling columns of steam of the geysers in a southerly direction, where he will encounter the smoke rising from the smokestacks of the Colorado Coal and Fuel Company, and I will say to him that when I was a member of the survey in that section the preliminary geological reports on the coal and iron fields of that section were made by this "useless" survey. To-day Pueblo is to the far West what Birmingham is to the South and Pittsburg to the East. There are great iron works there, which are supplying for that section railroad rails and machinery, the cost of which, if the expense of transportation were added to the cost of manufacture in the far East, would be practically prohibitory.

Surely, Mr. Chairman, the money expended in geological survey has been of practical use, and has brought back a return that mounts into the millions, and is beyond human computation.

In regard to the Museum itself, the gentleman says that it would be of great interest to all, that it should be maintained and handsomely housed, but he does not see why $175,000 should annually be expended for its support. Why, Mr. Chairman, if I thought for a moment that the great National Museum was simply a place of amusement for the people who come to Washington, I would not only be unwilling to serve on the Board of Regents, but I would oppose the appropriation of a single dollar for that institution. It costs $170,000 a year because the great collections that have been gathered there from all over the country at vast expense to the Government would be useless to science and scientific students if they were not properly arranged and classified and put in such order that those who seek information, not amusement, could have free access to them and find them properly arranged.

I am glad to say that the Board of Regents have submitted, and it will be put on the appropriation bill in the Senate, and will come to the House, an appropriation of $1,500,000 or $3,000,000 for a new building. I shall ask the earnest support of my colleagues for that appropriation, because these specimens that have been gathered at such great expense are now actually going to decay for the want of proper space and proper care and a building of sufficient size which should be waterproof, something the present building is not, in order that they may be properly protected.

The gentleman objects to the appropriation of $40,000 a year for the Bureau of Ethnology. This is a branch under the Geological Survey. It is purely historical and genealogical, I admit, in its character. It may not bring any practical returns, but it has to do with a question that interests all the men on this earth far more than science, far more than practical utility. That is the question of how we come to be here, where we came from, and what is the history, from an ethnological standpoint, of our country, who were the American Indians, what relation they have to Holy Scripture, what relation they have to the history of man in general. The sum asked is not a large sum. The research is purely scientific, I will admit, but it is not a work which could be expected to be carried on by private enterprise. It interests and benefits all the people of the country. It strikes me that it is a proper function of government, and one that should be carried on.

The gentleman criticises the item of $10,000 annually for the Paleontological Bureau. That is a practical branch of geology. Geological formation can not be interpreted, nor can its history be written, except through a study of the fossils. The practical side to this is that when great engineering problems come to be carried out, when tunnels are to be built and shafts are to be sunk, a knowledge of the nature of the soil and of the rock is absolutely essential. It has a practical side which is worth the money over and over again.

The gentleman criticises the appropriation of $15,000 for astrophysical research. Mr. Chairman, so much has come of practical utility from what was originally abstract study of science that nobody can pronounce what is useless or what will be useful. I am afraid the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT], if he had seen the great Franklin breasting the thunderstorm and flying his kite in the noise and roar thereof, and amid the shooting lightning, might have thought he was toying with a useless science. Yet I doubt not that when the gentleman from Massachusetts prepared his remarks he did it with the aid of the electric light, which would not have been at his command had it not been for that abstract study of science by Franklin.

The one branch of science about which we probably know less than any other is the relation of the sun to the earth. We have now great atmospheric disturbances. We have hurricanes that sweep the country, entailing great loss of life and terrible loss of property. We can not understand their origin or know whither they will take their course. So also with respect to the effect of the heat coming from the sun and the analysis of its rays. What may come from that in time no man can tell. It is a proper function of government, in my judgment, to carry on those researches. We are now using electricity for heat and other practical purposes. Who knows but some inventor may discover how to gather and concentrate the heat from the sun? Then we will have no trouble from grasping corporations or striking miners, because the supply will be unlimited and within the reach of all.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have endeavored to call the attention of the House to the great work that is carried on by the Smithsonian Institution. It was endowed, I am almost ashamed to say, not by an American, but by a lover of science who was an Englishman, a man who left his large fortune to this country for the diffusion and spread of knowledge among mankind. The Board of Regents is trying to carry out that object in its literal and interpreted sense. We are also trying to conduct, both scientifically and practically, the various Government bureaus which have been put under our charge.

I am frank to say there has not been that energy in the Board of Regents which is desirable, but there is a movement now on foot which shows activity. In fact, it is so active that some of us were almost frightened when at the end of the annual meeting we adjourned to meet again—something which has not happened in the six years during which I have had the honor to serve on the Board of Regents. We think that the great collections in that institution must be housed in a fine, large building and we feel they must be arranged and classified and properly taken care of by eminent curators. We feel that the various bureaus in the Geological Survey, in conjunction with the main one, should be carried on to a useful conclusion, and we ask that the House give that support to the institution in the future which it has always done in the past.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16567) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 7043) to establish a light-house depot for the second light-house district, Boston Harbor, Mass.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. R. 108) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase additional ground for the post-office, court-house, and custom-house at Jacksonville, Fla.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I fear this onslaught upon me by the gentleman from Pennsylvania in this crowded House will blast my reputation if I do not give a word of reply.

I can not expect to attain the eminence in all the branches of science which distinguishes him, and yet I do not wish to admit that I have that hostility to scientific attainment and improvement which his remarks would indicate.

When I spoke the other day I appreciated the fact that I probably should draw criticism upon my remarks from some of these branches of the Government that were reaching, as I suggested, into the Treasury, but I did not think at the time that I was touching my friend from Pennsylvania.

As he was extolling the usefulness of the Geological Survey it occurred to me that probably his first assistance from the National Government—and I must admit that all he has received from the Government he has more than repaid by his services—was as a member of the Geological Survey. And while I thought that I could, with impunity, criticise paleontology and ethnology and the Smithsonian Institution without touching the personality of any member of this House, I find I was mistaken; and it is really inconvenient that we should have in the House a member who is so distinguished in all scientific lines as our friend from Pennsylvania, so that I can not criticise any of these bureaus without having it appear to be a personal attack upon him and have it resented.

I knew the gentleman was distinguished as a diplomatist. I knew that he was distinguished in international law, but it did not occur to me at the time I spoke that he, like Edmund Burke, had made all knowledge his province, and that he was as familiar and intimate with paleontology as with international law and diplomatic usages. I am very glad to welcome and recognize his lofty attainments in these unusual pursuits. And yet I do not wish him to impute to me, from his superior standing ground, hostility to them. I did not attack science. I do not at all deny the utility of science. The gentleman illustrates it. But I simply think that it is not a part of the business of the Government to spend its money in advancing science unless it has some practical, material benefit.

The gentleman intimates that the great discoveries and development of our Western States come from geological researches. I do not agree with him upon that. I think the coal fields of Colorado would have been discovered without any geological survey. I do not think our gold mines or our silver mines or our lead mines have come from scientific research. It is the inherent, selfish, insatiable energy of the American people to make discoveries which will better themselves that have developed our country. It has not generally been the scientists who have made the money. As far as I know, my friend from Pennsylvania has never coined his scientific attainments into wealth. Nor is it the scientists, as a rule, who make the discoveries of mines and coal fields which materially benefit the country. It is the hard-working men who are out on the pioneer line making discoveries for themselves. And therefore I think we should trust them for the development of the country and that that is the way in which it will be best developed.

I do not believe paleontology and ethnology, which my friend so eloquently and enthusiastically describes—although I admire the intellect which is able to find pleasure in those studies—are so materially advantageous to the country that we ought to appropriate for them from the public Treasury. At the same time I do heartily agree with the desirability of them, and I recognize what my friend so well and eloquently expressed, the value of them to the world. I have no doubt he finds them of great value himself. I have no doubt that in the long evenings, when we perhaps suppose that he is getting relaxation from the intricate problems of international law which absorb his time, that he is really in his room communing with ichthyosauria and megatheriums, and going back to his younger scientific days, where his imagination revels, and where he finds that real intellectual pleasure which his nature craves and the fruits of which we all enjoy.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Chairman, as the gentleman and I are together about three evenings a week, we spend our time very profitably together.

Mr. MANN. Profitably to which one? [Laughter.]

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. It occurs to me, Mr. Chairman, that perhaps I have occasionally misjudged my friend, and when I have sometimes seen him here with the dreamy, sentimental look in his eyes, which I perhaps thought were turned upon the gallery and found their inspiration there, I was mistaken, and that really he was in a reverie, and had returned in fancy to his favorite realms of the Eocene and Silurian ages, and was indulging himself in that intellectual enjoyment which is so very much to his credit, and which I have no doubt strengthens his action and influence on this floor.

Now, I shall endeavor in future to give him full credit for these pursuits. I trust that science will still to high intellects give relaxation and pleasure, and I have no doubt but that in that way the world will be advanced. I do not decry it. I do not wish it should be diminished. I recognize the enthusiasm of scientists as inspiring perhaps the highest intellectual effort which we have and I would be the last one to criticise it. The only criticism I made the other day and the only one which I wish to stand by now is not that it is not most creditable to the persons who engage in it, not that it is not most useful to civilization and humanity, but that it is not one of the practical purposes for which the United States of America was organized and to which our Treasury should be devoted. [Applause.]

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I do not know of anyone who desires to speak on this side of the Chamber. I ask my colleague on the committee if he desires to speak.

[Mr. VANDIVER addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I desire at this time to submit some remarks, not upon the pending bill, but upon another question of much public interest. The question that I shall discuss for a while is that of the ownership of the Isle of Pines. This is a matter of concern to quite a number of citizens of the United States who have, since the ratification of the treaty with Spain, gone forward with the idea that that island belonged, under the treaty, to the United States. They have made investments to a considerable sum in the lands of that island and are entitled, as they think, and as I shall contend, to the protection of our Government, which they are not now receiving.

At the outset of what I shall say, Mr. Chairman, I want to disclaim here and now any partisanship or any intention to present this question from the standpoint of politics. It is a question which belongs to us as American citizens, and not as members of any political organization. The contention I make is that that island, under the treaty of Spain, belongs to the United States. The people who have gone there and invested their means—citizens of the United States—were warranted in the opinion that the territory belonged to our Government, and that they would be protected in all their rights as citizens of this Government in investing their money in that island. They have not been protected. They are not now being protected in their property and in their rights as citizens of the United States in that territory, which, I say, belongs to us. On the other hand, Cuba is exercising sovereignty over that island and is oppressing American citizens, who are lawfully there, by severe exactions, as I shall show. Before I proceed further, I desire, Mr. Chairman, to have read, in my time, three petitions or memorials, signed by several hundred citizens of the United States now in that island.

The Clerk proceeded to read the following:

A MEMORIAL OF AMERICAN CITIZENS OF THE UNITED STATES RESIDING ON THE ISLE OF PINES.

SIR: Your memorialists, numbering 300 American citizens, residing on the Isle of Pines, and who own more than one-half of the island, make the following prayer: First, relief from the present government of the Isle of Pines, and, second, that the island be retained as a part of the territory of the United States.

In respect to the first, it may be said that there is no government on the Isle of Pines. There is an alcalde and seven policemen and a clerk to a judge, whose office is in Habana Province, Cuba. The official actions of all these are governed by officers residing on the island of Cuba. As a matter of fact, there is no need of the presence of the alcalde and the policemen and clerk on the island, for the reason that the moral influence of the Americans is dominant and quite sufficient to maintain order. The clerk referred to has no jurisdiction nor powers which will enable him to transact any business of consequence to the residents of the island.

Almost the entire business that would come before a governmental officer has been the conveyance of land, the payment of taxes, and such acknowledgments as might be taken before a notary public. Yet whenever this business had to be attended to it was necessary to travel to the province of Habana, which required several days and entailed considerable expense, a hardship which many Americans have found it hard to bear. But this hardship is less burdensome and less objectionable than the greed shown by Cuban officials in the exaction of unreasonable fees for the performance of the simplest official acts. The experience of one of our American colonists, Mr. S. H. Pearcy, vice-president of the Isle of Pines Improvement Company, fully illustrates this. He had purchased a tract of land and was compelled to go to Bijucal, Cuba, where the records of the Isle of Pines are kept, to have the conveyance of the property made.

Owing to the procrastination of the Cuban officials he was unable to have the necessary papers executed for nearly four months, during which time he made ten trips from the Isle of Pines to Bijucal, which cost him about $300. In addition to this vexatious delay and unnecessary expense, he was compelled to pay the Cuban notary $500 for drawing the deed. Under the law no one but a notary can draw a deed in Cuba. He was then compelled to pay $1,160 to the recorder for recording the papers. Then he was forced to pay 1 per cent on all amounts of money stated in the papers, the purchase price of the property, all mortgages, etc., and then taxes amounting to $1,310.92. The total cost of obtaining a simple conveyance of this one piece of property was nearly $4,000. Under a rational and just system of government on the island nothing like this would be possible. Besides, the fees and taxes collected under an American government would be applied to improvements on the island. As it is now, Americans owning property on the island are taxed without representation, and money exacted from them is used in no way for their benefit.

It certainly could not have been contemplated by the United States Government, when the instruction was given to General Wood, dated May 16, 1902, to continue "the present government of the Isle of Pines as a de facto government," that it should continue any longer than was necessary for the Department of State to take up the matter and formulate a new and better government for the island.

The War Department relinquished control of the Isle of Pines when the island of Cuba was turned over to the Cuban Government, although it is respectfully submitted that this was not at all necessary, for the law officer of the War Department had explicitly recommended that an "arrangement should be made to station troops on said island before withdrawal from Cuba" (see telegram of Acting Secretary of War to Root, Secretary of War, Habana, Cuba, April 26, 1902). But the War Department did relinquish control of the Isle of Pines without stationing troops there in pursuance of the advice given by the law officer of that Department. It was believed that the State Department would immediately take up the administration of government on the island, which, however, it failed to do, and the island has been left without government and the prey of Cuban officials since May 20, 1902.

Prior to that time the government of the island was essentially under the administration of the War Department as represented in Governor-General Wood. This was the government that must have been referred to as the "present government" in the order of transfer which should be continued as a de facto government on the island. Had that government been continued as the de facto government, your memorialists would have no cause of complaint. But it was not. Instead, an entirely new government was instituted, provided for in the constitution of Cuba, notwithstanding the fact that article 6 of the Platt amendment in terms omits the Isle of Pines from the "proposed constitutional boundaries of Cuba." Thus the scope and meaning of the order of transfer are disregarded and the act of Congress violated. Why this anomalous and remarkable condition of things has been allowed to continue month after month in the face of appeals and prayers and protests, made in writing to the United States Government by 300 American citizens, who are entitled to the protection of their Government, is inexplicable. How much longer will this condition be allowed to continue?

It is difficult to understand how, under the cession of the island to the United States by Spain, and in the light of the Platt amendment omitting the island from the proposed constitutional boundaries of Cuba, any declaration of transfer could be held legal which turned over the island, even temporarily, to the Cuban Government. This would be essentially a repeal of the act of Congress and an abrogation of the terms of the treaty by an administrative officer. No power, save the Congress itself, could do this legally. Yet the order of the Secretary of War accomplished this very thing. In effect, it placed the Isle of Pines, which had been omitted by an act of Congress from the proposed constitutional boundaries of Cuba, within those boundaries, and it is there now. It is not only there by virtue of the declaration of transfer, but by express language of the Cuban constitution, Chapter VII, thereby violating the act of Congress approved March 2, 1901.

About May 1, 1902, Mr. J. C. Tichner and Mr. S. H. Pearcy, and others, had an interview with General Wood in Habana, in which the latter stated emphatically that it would not do to turn the Isle of Pines over to the Cuban Government, for the reason that it would be a violation of the Platt amendment, as well as be doing violence to the rights of the Americans on the island. He further stated that it was his intention to send a small military force over to the island to administer affairs there until something else was done to give the island a suitable form of government. The assurances given by General Wood were communicated to the Americans on the island, and great rejoicing followed. This rejoicing was turned into sorrow and depression by what actually occurred.

In respect to the second prayer, your memorialists beg to say that in locating on the Isle of Pines they relied upon the terms of the treaty of Paris affecting this island, to wit: "Spain relinquishes all claim of sovereignty over and title to Cuba * * * and * * * cedes to the United States the island of Porto Rico and other islands now under Spanish sovereignty in the West Indies." They relied not alone upon their own interpretation of the treaty, but also upon the interpretation of it given out by the War Department. August 10, 1899, George Bridges wrote to that Department as follows:

"I am seeking information respecting the Isle of Pines. Does it come in as Porto Rico, or under same conditions as Cuba? I expect to go there in November, and for this information I would thank you in advance."

The War Department replied, under date of August 14, 1899, as follows:

"Referring to your communication of August 10 instant, soliciting information respecting the Isle of Pines, I am directed by the Assistant Secretary of War to advise you that this island was ceded by Spain to the United States, and is, therefore, a part of our territory, although it is attached at present to the division of Cuba for governmental purposes. A copy of 'The Isle of Pines' is inclosed for your information, and you are advised that the disposition of public lands must await the action of Congress.

"Very respectfully,

"JOHN J. PERSHING,
"Assistant Adjutant-General."

This was accepted as sufficient. The island had been ceded by Spain to the United States. The War Department, which had administrative control of the island, had declared that it was a "part of our territory." Relying upon this statement, your memorialists, numbering over 300, emigrated to the Isle of Pines, purchased land, and immediately began improvements on the same, precisely as they would have done had they removed to any other territory belonging to the United States. They sought the genial climate, the rich soil, the fine timber, and the other advantages offered on the island. Under the circumstances they assuredly had a right to go there as American citizens, and they also had a right, as they now have, to expect full protection of life, liberty, and property under the flag of their country. These people are bona fide citizens of the United States. They have no purpose of expatriating themselves, and they now appeal to their own Government not to become a party to any act or treaty that will force expatriation upon them.

American citizens have acquired most of the land on the island. There are not to exceed twenty natives who are landed proprietors on the island. More of the island is owned by nonresident Spaniards and Cubans than by native residents. The public land does not exceed 20,000 acres. Hence the larger part of the island belongs to citizens of the United States, who purchased it from private individuals, and have made and are making substantial improvements upon it. Consequently the turning over of the island to Cuba would not only be giving that Government the control of the island, but would be placing under its absolute control a colony of 300 citizens of the United States, together with all of their interests, who are thus forced out of their own country, driven from under their own flag, deprived of the value of their property without hope of compensation, and many of them reduced to want and misery. Can the United States Government afford to do this?

Your memorialists have reason to rely upon statements current in Cuba that in the event of the Isle of Pines being turned over to the Cuban Government a part of the island will be used for prison purposes and a part for the colonization of lepers. Under such conditions Americans could not remain on the island. They would therefore be forced to part with their holdings at any price and leave the island. But whether the Cuban Government should use the island in the way indicated or not, it is not unreasonable to conclude that the administrative conditions would doubtless be such as to drive out self-respecting and independent Americans.

In this connection your memorialists would respectfully call attention to the following statement of facts:

First. There are over 300 American citizens domiciled on the Isle of Pines. They are bona fide American citizens who located on the island for the purpose of making permanent homes.

Second. They own in fee simple more than one-half of the island. On their holdings they have made large and valuable improvements in the way of building residences, barns, hotels, bath houses, electric and ice plants, and the setting out of hundreds of acres of orange trees procured in the United States.

Third. There is one colony of Americans who own 14,000 acres of as fine land as there is on the island. This land has been divided into farms on which are located families from Ohio, Indiana, New York, Illinois, and other States. They have built homes and are making all the improvements necessary for successful farming and fruit growing.

The Isle of Pines Company, composed of people from New York, New Jersey, Tennessee, and other States, own 200,000 acres of land, on which they have made extensive improvements, costing not less than $75,000. The investments of this company in land and improvements amount already to over $1,000,000. The company has recently erected a hotel, the furnishings of which alone cost $13,000. It purchased one estate for which $80,000 was paid.

The Fruit Culture Company has invested $175,000 in land and improvements, and more than 100 people are interested. These people represent 11 States of this Union.

The San José Company, in which 90 people are interested, has made investments amounting to over $1,000,000. The people in this company represent 7 States.

The Iowa colony comprises 40 families, or about 150 people, all from the State of Iowa, who have purchased 20,000 acres of land, on which they are making substantial improvements. They have laid out a town and have a post-office which was established by General Wood.

Fourth. There are 190 individuals, not connected in any way with companies or colonies, who have purchased small tracts of land and are making home improvements thereon. One of these individuals is Mr. Thomas Keenan, of Pittsburg, Pa., who has invested in land, on which he has erected a fine residence, an ice plant, and bath houses and other improvements, at an actual outlay of over $50,000.

Fifth. The value of the Isle of Pines to the United States is not fully appreciated by the United States Government. Its land is fertile, and the climate of the island is most salubrious. The water for drinking purposes is abundant and of the purest quality possible. There never has been an epidemic on the island of any kind. Even when yellow fever raged in Cuba, there was not a single case of that disease on the Isle of Pines. The Cubans who were able to do so fled to the Isle of Pines to escape the ravages of yellow fever. Its value as a winter resort for Americans is inestimable. Those who are most familiar with the island and its waters are firmly of the belief that, with comparatively small expenditure of money, one of the finest harbors in the world could be assured. This would enable the United States to have a coaling and naval station on their own island that would meet all the needs of the United States in that part of the West Indies.

We have the honor to be, your most obedient servants,

S. H. PEARCY,
J. H. H. RANDALL,
T. J. KEENAN.

COLUMBIA, ISLE OF PINES, October 15, 1902.

We, the subscribers, citizens of the United States, property owners and residents of the Isle of Pines, respectfully show:

First. That the Isle of Pines is, and has been since the ratification of the treaty of Paris between the United States and Spain, territory belonging to the United States. By the language of the treaty "Spain relinquishes all claim of sovereignty over and title to Cuba * * * and * * * cedes to the United States the island of Porto Rico and other islands now under Spanish sovereignty in the West Indies." In an official letter from the War Department, dated August 14, 1899, it was stated, in reply to an inquiry as to the status of the Isle of Pines, that "this island was ceded by Spain to the United States and is, therefore, a part of our territory, although it is attached at present to the division of Cuba for governmental purposes * * * and * * * the disposition of public lands must await the action of Congress."

Second. That no sovereignty, jurisdiction, and control over the Isle of Pines can be lawfully or rightfully exercised except by the United States.

Third. That such sovereignty, jurisdiction, and control over the Isle of Pines were exercised by the United States up to May 20, 1902, by the military governor of Cuba, under the direction of the President of the United States in his capacity as Commander in Chief of the Army of the United States.

Fourth. That on May 16, 1902, the said military governor of Cuba was directed by the Secretary of War, in contemplation of the approaching establishment of the Republic of Cuba, on May 20, 1902, with sovereignty over the Island of Cuba, to continue "the present government of the Isle of Pines as a de facto government."

Fifth. That, disregarding such directions, the said military governor failed to take any steps to continue the then existing government, but did, on May 20, 1902, turn over to the authority of the Republic of Cuba, as on that day established, full control over the Isle of Pines.

Sixth. That since May 20, 1902, the Government of the Republic of Cuba has continued to exercise all the functions of the government of the Isle of Pines.

Seventh. That the exercise of such functions of government by the Republic of Cuba is without warrant under the constitution of that Republic, by which instrument the Isle of Pines is expressly excluded from the constitutional limits of the Republic.

Eighth. That in the exercise of the authority thus usurped the Cuban Government has levied and collected and continues to levy and collect oppressive taxes in the Isle of Pines, the proceeds of which are remitted to and expended in the island of Cuba.

Ninth. That no provision is made by the usurping government for the adequate administration of justice in the Isle of Pines, and that such government as is there maintained is inefficient, inadequate, and unreliable.

Wherefore the subscribers, who, relying on the statement and the official assurance that the island is territory of the United States, have settled in the Isle of Pines and who have invested large sums of money there in the purchase and improvement of real properties, now claim from the Government of the United States the protection due to American citizens on American territory, and respectfully pray:

First. That it be publicly declared, by proper authority, that the Isle of Pines is territory of the United States, and that as such it can not be ceded to any other sovereignty except by the Congress of the United States.

Second. That steps be taken immediately to establish a government in the Isle of Pines under the authority of the United States.

Third. That pending the establishment of such government the Republic of Cuba and all persons acting or claiming to act under its authority be restrained from levying and collecting duties, imposts, and taxes of any kind, and from exercising any of the rights and functions of government, except so far as may be necessary to keep the peace, within the island.

Fourth. That on relinquishing control of the island the Cuban Government be required to account to the United States for all duties, imposts, and taxes of all kinds levied and collected in the Isle of Pines or from residents thereof since May 20, 1902, and that the net product of such taxes be turned over to such government as may be established in the island under the authority of the United States.

And your petitioners will ever pray.

PETITION OF CERTAIN RESIDENTS AND PROPERTY OWNERS OF THE ISLE OF PINES PRAYING THAT IT BE PUBLICLY DECLARED, BY THE PROPER AUTHORITY, THAT THE ISLE OF PINES IS TERRITORY OF THE UNITED STATES, ETC.; AND THAT STEPS BE TAKEN IMMEDIATELY TO ESTABLISH A GOVERNMENT IN THE ISLE OF PINES UNDER THE AUTHORITY OF THE UNITED STATES.

January 27, 1903.—Referred to the Committee on Relations with Cuba and ordered to be printed.

We, the subscribers, citizens of the United States, property owners and residents of the Isle of Pines, respectfully show:

First. That the Isle of Pines is and has been, since the ratification of the treaty of Paris between the United States and Spain, territory belonging to the United States. By the language of the treaty "Spain relinquishes all claim of sovereignty over and title to Cuba * * * and * * * cedes to the United States the islands of Porto Rico and other islands now under Spanish sovereignty in the West Indies." In an official letter from the War Department, dated August 14, 1899, it was stated, in reply to an inquiry as to the status of the Isle of Pines, that "this island was ceded by Spain to the United States and is therefore a part of our territory, although it is attached at present to the division of Cuba for governmental purposes * * * and * * * the disposition of public lands must await the action of Congress."

Second. That no sovereignty, jurisdiction, and control over the Isle of Pines can be lawfully or rightfully exercised except by the United States.

Third. That such sovereignty, jurisdiction, and control over the Isle of Pines were exercised by the United States up to May 20, 1902, by the military governor of Cuba, under the direction of the President of the United States, in his capacity of Commander in Chief of the Army of the United States.

Fourth. That on May 16, 1902, the said military governor of Cuba was directed by the Secretary of War, in contemplation of the approaching establishment of the Republic of Cuba, on May 20, 1902, with sovereignty over the island of Cuba, to continue "the present government of the Isle of Pines as a de-facto government."

Fifth. That, disregarding such direction, the said military governor failed to take any steps to continue the then existing government, but did, on May 20, 1902, turn over to the authority of the Republic of Cuba, as on that day established, full control over the Isle of Pines.

Sixth. That since May 20, 1902, the Government of the Republic of Cuba has continued to exercise all the functions of government in the Isle of Pines.

Seventh. That the exercise of such functions of government by the Republic of Cuba is without warrant under the constitution of that Republic, by which instrument the Isle of Pines is expressly excluded from the constitutional limits of the Republic.

Eighth. That in the exercise of the authority thus usurped the Cuban Government has levied and collected, and continues to levy and collect, oppressive taxes in the Isle of Pines, the proceeds of which are remitted to and expended in the island of Cuba.

Ninth. That no provision is made by the usurping Government for the adequate administration of justice in the Isle of Pines, and that such government as is there maintained is inefficient, inadequate, and unreliable.

Wherefore, the subscribers who, relying on the statement and the official assurance that the island is territory of the United States, have settled in the Isle of Pines, and who have invested large sums of money there in the purchase and improvement of real properties, now claim from the Government of the United States the protection due to American citizens on American territory and respectfully pray:

First. That it be publicly declared by the proper authority that the Isle of Pines is territory of the United States, and that as such it can not be ceded to any other sovereignty except by the Congress of the United States.

Second. That steps be taken immediately to establish a government in the Isle of Pines, under the authority of the United States.

Third. That pending the establishment of such government, the Republic of Cuba, and all persons acting or claiming to act under its authority, be restrained from levying and collecting duties, imposts, and taxes of any kind, and from exercising any of the rights and functions of government, except so far as may be necessary to keep the peace within the island.

Fourth. That on relinquishing control of the island the Cuban Government be required to account to the United States for all duties, imposts, and taxes of all kinds levied and collected in the Isle of Pines, or from residents thereof, since May 20, 1902, and that the net product of such taxes be turned over to such government as may be established in the island under the authority of the United States.

And your petitioners will ever pray.

During the reading of the foregoing the following occurred:

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. That memorial is quite long, and I will ask——

Mr. DALZELL. To whom is the first memorial addressed?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It was not addressed to anyone.

Mr. DALZELL. It begins with the word "Sir."

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I have a copy of it here. It is intended to be addressed to Congress, and has been presented to Congress. I ask permission that, without further reading of the three petitions or memorials, they may be inserted in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the memorials may be printed as a part of his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I want to comment somewhat, Mr. Chairman, upon some of the statements in these memorials. First, I desire to call attention to article 2 of the treaty of peace between the United States and Spain concluded at Paris on December 10, 1898. Article 2 of that treaty is as follows:

ART. 2. Spain cedes to the United States the island of Porto Rico and the other islands now under Spanish sovereignty in the West Indies.

Of course it goes without saying, Mr. Chairman, that the Isle of Pines was one of the islands in the West Indies, and at that time under the sovereignty of Spain, and by the express letter of this treaty it was ceded to the United States.

On the 14th day of August, 1899, one of the persons now interested in this property in the Isle of Pines desired a further assurance from our authorities as to the title to this island, and at that time he addressed a communication to the War Department. This was Mr. George Bridges, and the memorial sets out these facts. Mr. Bridges said:

I am seeking information respecting the Isle of Pines. Does it come in as Porto Rico or under the same conditions as Cuba? I expect to go there in November, and for this information I would thank you in advance.

This was addressed, as I understand it, to the Secretary of War. The War Department replied under date of August 14, 1899, as follows:

Referring to your communication of August 10 instant, soliciting information respecting the Isle of Pines, I am directed by the Assistant Secretary of War to advise you that this island was ceded by Spain to the United States and is, therefore, a part of our territory, although it is attached at present to the Division of Cuba for governmental purposes. A copy of The Isle of Pines is inclosed for your information, and you are advised that the disposition of public lands must await the action of Congress.

Very respectfully,
JOHN J. PERSHING,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

This petitioner states that he accepted this assurance as sufficient, and he went forward believing that the Isle of Pines was a part of the territory of the United States and invested his money. Not only that, but over 300 other memorialists, citizens, as they stated in those memorials, have done the same thing.

To show you that the Government treated this island as not belonging to Cuba, when Congress passed the Army bill in February, 1901, near the close of the last Congress, there was attached to the Army bill what is known as the Platt amendment. Item 6 of the Platt amendment provides that the Isle of Pines shall be omitted from the constitutional boundaries of Cuba, and so forth, the title being left for future adjustment. So that not only the treaty, not only the Secretary of War, but the Congress by positive enactment in the Platt amendment excepted the Isle of Pines from the constitutional boundaries of the island of Cuba.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Has the United States Government ever in any way disclaimed ownership of the Isle of Pines? And if so, when?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The Government of the United States has never disclaimed ownership. On the other hand, it has all along asserted ownership, and I was coming to that. The military governor of Cuba, General Wood, had military control of the Isle of Pines, and when he retired in May he had a provision made with respect to the Isle of Pines. I have it here. The sovereignty, jurisdiction, and control over the island was exercised by the United States through General Wood up to May 20, 1902, when the military government of the United States terminated in Cuba.

On the 16th of May, 1902, four days before the termination of this military government, the military governor of Cuba was directed by the Secretary of War, in contemplation of the then early approaching establishment of the Republic of Cuba, to continue the present government in the Isle of Pines as a de facto government. The order was that the present government of Cuba—on the 16th of May, 1902, which was the military government of General Wood—should be continued in the Isle of Pines as the de facto government. No other government could be referred to as the present government except that of General Wood.

Now, as a matter of fact, this de facto government has not been so continued. On the other hand, the authorities in Cuba are to-day exercising sovereignty, jurisdiction, and control over this island and over the American citizens who have gone there under the assurances which I have briefly adverted to and which gave them the right to go there and make their investments and their homes.

The first memorial which I have set out here mentions a very interesting fact to which I wish to call attention. A prominent holder of the property in that island is a citizen of my own State, S. H. Pearcy. I give his name that it may be known to whom I refer. He is a reliable and responsible man. In taking a deed to property in the Isle of Pines only recently he was compelled to submit to what I consider the grossest extortion. I call attention to the charges he was required to pay in taking this deed. In the first place, he was compelled to make ten trips from the Isle of Pines to Cuba, some 90 or 100 miles. He was then compelled to go to a notary public in Cuba and pay $300 for the mere drawing of the deed. He was then forced to submit to a charge of over $1,160 for the recording of the deed, and then to a tax of $1,310.92 for the benefit of the Cuban Government.

Not one dollar of it went into the treasury of the Isle of Pines, for it has no treasury. Not a cent of it was applied to the benefit or uses of the people resident in the Isle of Pines. Every dollar of it went into the treasury of the present Government of Cuba. Mr. Chairman, notwithstanding the reservations to which I have referred, the express language of the treaty with Spain, notwithstanding the provision in the Platt amendment, notwithstanding the order of the military governor of the 16th of May, 1902, before he turned over the Government of Cuba to the people of Cuba, Cuba has assumed to exercise sovereignty or jurisdiction and control over the island, and is now exercising such jurisdiction and control.

In fact, by the constitution of that island, the Isle of Pines is declared to be included in the province of Habana. Chapter 7 of their constitution says the third circuit "will be composed of the ayuntamientos of Guines, La Catalina, Madruga, Melena del Sur, Nueva Paz, San Nicolas, Guara, Bejucal, Batabano, Quivican, Isle of Pines, San Antonio de las Vegas, San Felipe, and La Salud." And this plainly in violation of the statute of the United States, as I have already quoted. Since May 28, 1902, the Isle of Pines has been treated as within the constitutional boundaries of Cuba; indeed, as an integral part of that island. Now, I have mentioned the fact which led up to it, and it seems to me it makes a very interesting chapter for our country.

Mr. STEELE. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. STEELE. Has it been so treated by the United States?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. No; the United States has taken no action so far as I know. With a view to ascertaining what all the facts in the case are, a resolution has been prepared, and I believe it has passed the Senate, calling on the President to give us all the facts and information in respect to the matter. I am not seeking to interfere at all in the case, or to prejudge the question, but am seeking simply to express my view as to the conditions in the island, and to say that with the information we have the title to the island is in the United States. I have myself introduced a similar resolution in the House to-day calling on the President for the information. In addition thereto I have presented another resolution, which I will read:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That it is the sense of Congress that the Isle of Pines is, and has been since the ratification of the treaty of Paris between the United States and Spain, territory belonging to the United States, and can not as such be ceded to any other sovereignty or government, except by the Congress of the United States.

2. Resolved, That no sovereignty, jurisdiction, or control over the Isle of Pines can be lawfully or rightfully exercised except by the United States.

This resolution and the other one to which I have referred as having been introduced by myself were referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs. I hope they will be considered at an early day and that a report will be made to Congress. Under the rules of the House it may be, unless some special power is invoked, that the resolutions, if reported, will not be considered. How that is I shall not attempt to say, but I believed that it was necessary and proper that the attention of the House, of Congress, and the country should be called to the conditions now obtaining in the Isle of Pines.

I close by saying now what I said in the beginning, that I do not do this in any partisan sense. I do not seek to have the matter prejudged in any way; but simply desire to put before the country the conditions prevailing in the island and to ask that relief be given to over 300 American citizens who have gone there under full guaranty of protection, etc., as I believe, from the Government of the United States. These 300 citizens come from scores of States. I know a number from my own State. The memorial that I shall print in the RECORD sets out that 40 families or more have gone from the State of Iowa and have made investments there. I know from what the memorial sets out and from conversations with the distinguished gentleman on the other side from the Pittsburg district that citizens of Pennsylvania residing within his district have made investments in this island. All I wish to do is to call attention to the matter, and I would be delighted if the Committee on Insular Affairs will take up and consider the resolutions I have presented so that the House may pass them, and that we may declare that in our judgment under the treaty and under the acts of Congress this island belongs to the United States.

Mr. STEELE. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. I agree with the gentleman thoroughly that we ought to have the information asked for in the first resolution, but as long as we are asking for that information, does the gentleman not think that it would be well to withhold the second resolution until that information has been presented, instead of passing judgment and declaring a positive fact? We are asking for information which might change our minds when it is given.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Certainly, I agree with the gentleman that that is right. I would not ask the committee or Congress to act upon the second resolution until we have the information, but I have introduced both in order that we might get the information, and when we get it have the second resolution before the committee so that they may act upon it.

Mr. BOUTELL. Does the gentleman understand that there are any civil or military officers of the Cuban Republic exercising authority there?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. This memorial sets out that there is an alcalde there, with a few lieutenants or officers under him, but if the gentleman had given attention he would have seen what they say upon that question.

Mr. BOUTELL. I listened to the reading of the memorial.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It will be printed in the RECORD, and the gentleman will see that they say that there is some form of administration there, but it is very imperfect, very unsatisfactory, highly tyrannical.

Mr. BOUTELL. And it would appear to be in contravention of the terms of the treaty.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Clearly in contravention of the terms of the treaty and the order of the military governor, General Wood, when he turned over the island of Cuba to the Cuban authorities.

Mr. BOUTELL. Do you understand that either judicial writs or law are used against our citizens in the Isle of Pines?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. It is understood it is a military law. I know it is not law and order, though I do not want to comment upon that improperly.

Mr. ESCH. Have you any information of the collection of taxes on the Isle of Pines, and, if collected, if they are paid, into what treasury they are being paid?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I have already said that that money is paid into the treasury of Cuba. One of these memorials insists that the Government of Cuba should be required to account to the United States for every dollar of tax collected in this way since the 30th of May, 1902.

Mr. ESCH. And that notwithstanding the treaty of Paris?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Notwithstanding the treaty of Paris, notwithstanding the Platt amendment, and notwithstanding the orders of the War Department. I will ask to print all three of the petitions, though they cover the same ground.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to print certain matters to which he has referred in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I do not know of anyone on this side of the Chamber who desires time in general debate. I will ask my colleague on the other side whether that side of the Chamber is through?

Mr. TATE. We do not care for any further time.

Mr. FOSS. Well, Mr. Chairman, I will ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FOSS. I ask the Clerk to proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

PAY, MISCELLANEOUS.

For commissions and interest; transportation of funds; exchange; mileage to officers while traveling under orders in the United States, and for actual personal expenses of officers while traveling abroad under orders, and for traveling expenses of civilian employees, and for actual and necessary traveling expenses of midshipmen while proceeding from their homes to the Naval Academy for examination and appointment as midshipmen; for rent and furniture of buildings and offices not in navy-yards; expenses of courts-martial, prisoners and prisons, and courts of inquiry, boards of inspection, examining boards, with clerks' and witnesses' fees, and traveling expenses and costs; stationery and recording; expenses of purchasing-paymasters' offices of the various cities, including clerks, furniture, fuel, stationery, and incidental expenses; newspapers and advertising; foreign postage; telegraphing, foreign and domestic; telephones; copying; care of library, including the purchase of books, photographs, prints, manuscripts, and periodicals; ferriage, tolls, and express fees; costs of suits; commissions, warrants, diplomas, and discharges; relief of vessels in distress; recovery of valuables from shipwrecks; quarantine expenses; reports; professional investigations; cost of special instruction, at home or abroad, in maintenance of students and attachés and information from abroad, and the collection and classification thereof, and other necessary and incidental expenses, $600,000.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee in charge of this bill the meaning of the word "interest," in line 16, page 2? What interest does the Navy Department pay?

Mr. FOSS. The explanation of that is in the hearings of last year. I will have to get the hearings of last year to give the gentleman an explanation of the matter. It has been in the bill for a number of years.

Mr. HEPBURN. Does that refer to interest due on deposits of enlisted men?

Mr. FOSS. I understand it does.

Mr. HEPBURN. That is satisfactory.

The Clerk read as follows:

Gunnery exercises: Prizes for excellence in gunnery exercises and target practice; diagrams and reports of target practice; for the establishment and maintenance of targets and ranges: for hiring established ranges, and for transportation to and from ranges, to be immediately available, $120,000.

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out of that paragraph the words "one hundred and twenty thousand" and insert "sixty thousand."

Mr. Chairman, the amount carried in the bill for the past year was $12,000, and this increase of 1,000 per cent strikes me as more than necessary. The only reason given to the committee for this increase was in a paper filed before that committee and the testimony of Captain Cowles, who was the acting chief of the Bureau of Navigation. This paper stated, among other things:

There are now practically no ranges owned by the Navy. The few that in the past have been improvised, and with insufficient money, disappeared. At any rate, we have now adopted "Army firing regulations," and we must provide places to carry out the "firing."

Again:

It is proposed to build permanent ranges for firing up to a thousand yards, and to purchase the necessary land at places marked with (A): Pensacola, Fla.; (A) Yorktown, Va.; (A) Great Salt Pond, Block Island; Frenchmans Bay, Me. (coaling station); New London, Conn.; training station, Newport, R. I.; Naval Academy; (A) Puget Sound; (A) Santa Rosa Island, Cal., near Santa Barbara.

This provision as now before the committee does not include the purchase of land. In the hearings it was stated that no part of it was to be used for the purchase of land. Under these circumstances, as no part of this money is to be used for securing permanent ranges and ownership of the land, I think an increase of 500 per cent in one year is sufficient, and for that reason I have offered the amendment to reduce the amount.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, in truth this is a large increase. I know that the committee at first thought it would be wise to adopt the suggestion made by the gentleman in his amendment—to cut it down to $60,000. But the Secretary of the Navy came before us and showed, we thought conclusively, that this was perhaps in many respects one of the most important items in the bill. In his hearing before the committee he says upon this subject:

I do not know of anybody who has expressed it better than the President has when he says that the only shots that count are those that hit.

At the present time we are having in the Navy a great deal of target practice, and the present administration is emphasizing that particularly. Further in the Secretary's hearings, he says:

Every nation in the world is training its men to shoot these guns quickly and straight. There is no way that we can multiply our offensive power so cheaply as by making our gun fire effective. We want to offer prizes to the men every month, and we want to build targets on the land—ranges, rather—where they can practice with rifles and pistols, because if they become good marksmen with the rifles the tendency is to become good marksmen with the guns.

We wish to spend this money for the two purposes that I have named. The President is very anxious about this, and he inquired of me why we stopped paying prizes to the men. We stopped that because our money gave out; and I would suggest, if you make this appropriation, that you make it immediately available, as otherwise we can not begin to pay the prizes until the 1st of July.

Mr. DAYTON. Can you spend the whole of this money in inaugurating this system carefully and painstakingly this year?

Secretary MOODY. I think so, because we want to buy some land and build some ranges. It will be in an unfrequented place, and the land will be very cheap. I think we can use this amount in the coming year and do it without any waste. I would like to add to my testimony, with your permission, this, which is prepared by one of our young and ambitious officers, with regard to target practice. It contains a good deal of information, and I do not believe any harm would come from publishing it all.

I would say to gentlemen of the committee that we regard this as very important. We have not in the past paid as much attention to target practice as we ought to have paid, and the result is that our Navy is not up to the point it ought to be. Foreign navies are paying a good deal more attention to this matter than ever before, and more than we have been paying ourselves, and on this account and on account of the strong emphasis which has been given to it by the Secretary of the Navy and the President in his desire to keep up an efficient navy in every respect, I ask that this provision stand in the bill as reported by the committee.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. CAPRON having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the President, by Mr. BARNES, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On February 14, 1903:

H. R. 2422. An act for the relief of Edward S. Crill;

H. R. 12064. An act for the relief of Lebbeus H. Rogers and the administrators of William B. Moses, deceased;

H. R. 14512. An act to amend an act to add certain counties in Alabama to the northern district therein, and to divide the said northern district, after the addition of said counties, into two divisions, and to prescribe the times and places for holding courts therein, and for other purposes, approved May 2, 1884; and

H. R. 16334. An act fixing terms of United States courts in Colorado, and for other purposes.

On February 17, 1903:

H. R. 10678. An act for the relief of the Florida Brewing Company.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed it session.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that instead of diminishing this appropriation wisdom would require that it should be increased. The very object of having a navy is to have an effective navy that can use their guns, and use them effectively. Evidently we have not reached that point yet. I want to call attention to something I find in the hearings before the committee. The report of the inspector of target practice is by no means encouraging.

The forward turret of the Kearsarge, in charge of Lieut. J. M. Poyer, of the United States Navy, did some extraordinarily good shooting, 11 shots and 7 hits. But the remainder of the firing was far under the average that should have been made. Such a result as the Alabama, 53 shots and 15 hits; the Kearsarge, 49 shots and 13 hits; the Massachusetts, 50 shots and 3 hits.

Now, in my judgment, without knowing very much about the matter, that is a disgraceful record. It is one that the Navy ought to be ashamed of if they are responsible for it. If Congress, by niggardly appropriation is responsible for it, refusing to give the proper funds to make these experiments in gunnery, then it is another thing, and the Navy and the personnel of the Navy should be relieved from the disgraceful exhibition here recorded.

I would a great deal rather see the sum doubled than cut in two. Just think of it, suppose by this procedure, this expenditure, we can double the efficiency of the Navy in making hits. Think what the result would be. It would make each one of our battle ships that cost $6,000,000 the equal of two. By doubling the power of a gun's crew and the crew of a vessel, it would be tantamount to saving $6,000,000 of the cost of two ships. Isn't it wisdom to do that rather than haggle over an appropriation of $120,000, which is far too small—by one-half? [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Iowa to the fact that this item is not the main provision that furnishes the target practice for the Navy. Last year there was an appropriation of $800,000 in another part of the bill, and, as I recollect it, Admiral O'Neil stated that one-half of that $800,000 was used in target practice.

On page 10 of the bill we are now discussing there is an item for other matters mentioned "and for target practice" of $1,500,000 instead of the $800,000 of last year. As I understand it, one-half of this $1,500,000 will probably be used for target practice. If that be true, then in another paragraph of this bill than the one now under discussion there is practically an appropriation of $750,000 for target practice. This particular item now under discussion is for—

Prizes for excellence in gunnery exercise and target practice; diagrams and reports of target practice; for the establishment and maintenance of targets and ranges; for hiring established ranges, and for transportation to and from ranges, to be immediately available, $120,000.

It does not include any other expense of target practice whatever. It does not include the cost of the powder and the ball, it includes nothing of that character. It seems to me that the increase of this item from $12,000, when we expended $400,000 in target practice, to $60,000 for the ensuing year, will be amply sufficient to enable them to expend the $750,000 provided as I have indicated elsewhere for target practice.

So, recognizing the desire of everyone that there shall be satisfactory practice and improvement in target shooting, it seems the service would not be endangered or injured by striking this appropriation down from $120,000 to $60,000, which will then leave it five times as much as it was last year.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. RIXEY].

The question was taken and the amendment was lost.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I would be glad to call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois in charge of the bill to two clauses in this paragraph. Gentlemen understand that under the rules of the House—which are wise when you get down to the reason of them—that while the naval appropriation bill goes to the naval committee, all the deficiency items go to the Appropriation Committee. Now, the difference between the two is that this bill provides for the service of the naval establishment for the coming fiscal year, commencing on the 1st of July, whereas a deficiency bill is a bill to provide money for the service in this year where the appropriations are short.

Now, this item in this bill, on page 5, closes with "to be immediately available, $120,000." Just before that, in line 22, on page 4, under the head of "recruiting," says "to be immediately available, $88,571." Now, I hold in my hand a deficiency estimate for $80,000 for a recruiting item. The Committee on Appropriations has considered that item and, in the preparation of its bill, has inserted it. I have another instance in mind, for barracks and quarters in the Philippine Islands. The Secretary of War submits a deficiency item of $250,000; that is for the current year.

We have considered it, and in the preparation of our bill, almost ready to report to the House, that is to be one of the items. It is also in by a Senate amendment now in conference; they put the item on the Army bill for next year, so that you see the tendency is to put the items in the current year upon bills for the coming year, and it breeds confusion. The respective committees, the Committee on Naval Affairs, the Committee on Military Affairs, the Committee on Indian Affairs, did they put items in their bills for the current year and we put them on the deficiency bill we should not know where we are at. It breeds confusion and duplication of appropriations. Both of these items are, in my judgment, eminently proper.

I do not know whether there is too much money appropriated for the coming fiscal year for recruiting, or whether the amount ought to be decreased if the words "to be immediately available" are stricken out. I am not speaking about that; but if the House and the Senate are to be enabled to keep any track of appropriations, and to avoid duplications, the rules will have to be complied with. Hence I ask my colleague whether he will not consent to strike out in the two places where they occur the words "to be immediately available." Let me add that this bill will not pass until about the 4th of March; and the deficiency bill will pass at about the same time.

Mr. FOSS. I am thoroughly in sympathy with the suggestion of my colleague. The words "to be immediately available" are undoubtedly subject to a point of order, and on general principles ought not to appear in the regular appropriation bill. They did not appear in the first draft of the bill, but the Secretary of the Navy sent us a letter requesting that these words be inserted. He said that we had reached almost the limit in the number of enlisted men and that we would probably reach it fully by the 1st of March; and he desired these words to be put in so that the recruiting of the additional 3,000 men provided for in the bill might go on.

But if, as my colleague says, this matter has been taken care of in the deficiency bill, I am perfectly willing to let the words go out. Let me add that I am always willing to join with my colleague in the matter of seeing to it that we keep these appropriation bills free from any and all of these objections. I am willing even to go further and seek to have the appropriations made from year to year in these appropriation bills so reasonable that there will be no necessity for deficiencies whatever.

The tendency on the part of all Departments is perhaps to ask more than they can actually get along with; and I think it would be wise if we could make our appropriations sufficiently liberal in our regular bills and cut down deficiencies. This would, in my judgment, tend to advance the economical administration of the public service.

But as far as this particular matter is concerned, as my colleague has said that it is taken care of in the deficiency bill, I move to strike out in line 22, page 4, and also in line 12, page 5, the words "to be immediately available."

The proposed amendment of Mr. Foss was read by the Clerk.

Mr. VANDIVER. If these words be stricken out, what becomes of the necessity for the appropriation? Does it need to be just as large?

Mr. FOSS. These amendments were sent to the committee before the request was made that the money be immediately available, and in view of that fact I should think the amount ought to stand.

The question being taken, the amendment of Mr. Foss was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Athletic exercises and sports: Prizes to enlisted men for excellence in athletic exercises on national holidays and at other times; for hiring grounds, and for transportation to and from place of sports of men taking part in the sports, $5,000.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. I raise a point of order on the paragraph just read. My point is that there is no law authorizing this appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. Can the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] refer the Chair to any law under which this appropriation is made?

Mr. FOSS. I will say that this is an entirely new provision, and is, in my judgment, subject to a point of order. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN] is, of course, familiar with the statement of the Secretary of the Navy, and he knows the necessity for the appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from North Carolina to make the point of order?

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Naval training station, Great Lakes: For the purchase of a site for a naval training station and toward the erection of the necessary buildings thereon, $250,000: Provided, That said site shall be upon the shore of Lake Michigan below latitude 43° 40′, at a point to be selected, with the approval of the Secretary of the Navy, by the board of naval officers appointed by the Secretary of the Navy for that purpose in pursuance of the authority conferred by the act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes, approved July 1, 1902.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I raise a point of order against this paragraph.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make the same point of order.

Mr. GROSVENOR. This is a proposition which was left out of the order as adopted by the Committee on Rules. It was inserted in the original resolution, but was stricken out on an amendment in the committee.

Mr. DAYTON. Before the Chair passes on the point of order I should like to be heard for a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. DAYTON. I submit to the Chair that this provision is not subject to a point of order for two reasons: First, for the general reason that these training stations are a part and parcel of the naval establishment, just as much so as a dry dock or a shipyard.

I submit to the Chair that this question was decided adversely, and for a long time it was held, for instance, that to provide for the erection of a dry dock was not in order as a provision for the naval establishment. But finally the better reasoning prevailed, and it was decided that a provision for any or all things necessary to the naval establishment was not subject to a point of order, but was a proper thing to be provided for in an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman state to the Chair where an appropriation for dry docks has been held to be in order?

Mr. DAYTON. In the first place, Mr. Chairman, the provision in the bill for dry docks at Algiers was rejected on the point of order. That was in the Fifty-second Congress, first session. In the second session of the Fifty-fourth Congress an amendment for the construction of a dry dock at Boston went out on a point of order, and in the first session of the Fifty-fourth Congress an amendment for a new dock at League Island went out on a point of order.

In the second session of the Fifty-fifth Congress the point of order was raised against a paragraph providing for a dry dock at Algiers. The Chair overruled the point of order on the ground that the appropriation had been authorized by previous law and would be a part of the naval establishment. Then in the Fifty-fifth Congress, in the second session, a paragraph appointing a board of naval officers in connection with the dry dock at Galveston was passed upon.

Now, I submit, Mr. Chairman, that it was finally determined that anything pertaining to the naval establishment as a whole was not subject to a point of order. The second reason why I insist that this point of order should not be sustained is that this training station has been already authorized by law, and I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that in the last appropriation bill, when it was considered by the House, substantially this section was incorporated in it:

Naval training station, Great Lakes: The Secretary of the Navy is hereby directed to appoint a board composed of naval officers, whose duty it shall be to select on the Great Lakes a suitable site for an additional naval training station, and, having selected such site, if upon private lands, to estimate its value and ascertain as nearly as practicable the cost for which it can be purchased and acquired, and of their proceedings and actions to make full and detailed report to the Secretary, who shall transmit such report with his recommendations thereon to Congress for its action; and to defray the expenses of said board the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available, is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

I want to be frank with the Chair and state that a point of order was made in the House against that provision in the appropriation bill of last year, and that point of order was sustained because it provided for the selection of a site and the establishment of a training school on the Great Lakes. But when the bill went over to the Senate that provision was incorporated in it, and when it came back and finally passed it became a part and parcel of the law carried by that bill.

Mr. VANDIVER. I would ask the gentleman if that site has been selected in accordance with that provision?

Mr. DAYTON. That site has been selected within a radius as shown by the report of the Secretary of the Navy, but for the benefit of the Government the board has not made known its selection, simply because it will be to the interest of the Government not to do so. The site can be procured for a lower price than it could be if it were known where it is to be. I insist this language could not be stronger, or that the parliamentary situation could not be plainer. It went out on a point of order on the last appropriation bill because it substantially established a training station on the Great Lakes. In the Senate it went into the bill and it became a law by the last appropriation bill. This is simply carrying out the appropriation necessary to make good the legislation of last year.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, suppose we stop at the point where we are, what would we have? We would have a commission and we would have a report from that commission. How would you obtain the land? Why, to my mind this is not a debatable question, and the Committee on Naval Affairs seems to have so understood it, for they sent to the Committee on Rules a proposition for authority to make this valid in this bill.

There were four propositions sent to the Committee on Rules. First, as to the personnel of the Navy, additional midshipmen, etc., and, second, this very proposition; and, third, another, and, fourth, another. The order as it came back, and as it has been enacted by the House, left in two of them and struck out two of them. That request came to the Committee on Rules by order of the Committee on Naval Affairs. They seem to have put a correct construction upon their own powers at the time. Now, it has never been held in any instance that the power to appropriate money to build a dry dock carried with it authority to purchase a site.

Mr. DAYTON. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him just for a moment?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Well, I am in the middle of a proposition. Take the Algiers case. That is not a permanent stone dock, that requires the purchase of land, but a floating dock, and that is the distinction borne all the way through in this legislation.

Mr. DAYTON. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact, and ask him the single question as a conclusion to be drawn on the other side. The committee asking for the rule might very well insist that the only reason for doing it was to avoid all question on the proposition.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Oh, they might.

Mr. DAYTON. Wait a moment. And is it not also a legitimate conclusion that when the Committee on Rules excluded it they did so because they did not deem it necessary to have any rule upon the subject?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to give away the secrets of the committee, but I think it would be a most absurd act on the part of the Committee on Rules to exclude a matter of this character because the authority was already there. Rather they would give the authority.

I myself had very serious doubts personally whether there was not already sufficient authority without the action of the Committee on Rules to enable this Committee on Naval Affairs to bring in the proposition for the personnel of the Navy and the Marine Corps, because that relates to the organization and the filling up of the corps of officers of the naval establishment. But not since I have been a member of this House has there ever been authority conferred to buy land and erect buildings upon the purchased land under the authority given to maintain a navy or an army. My friend the chairman of the Military Committee [Mr. HULL] suggests that you can not build an army post. You may organize as many troops as you please and you may locate them wherever you please. You may send them to the Philippines or to Chickamauga Park, but you can not buy land and build houses upon that land, for that is certainly and clearly new legislation.

Mr. DAYTON. Will the gentleman pardon me for one moment?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Certainly.

Mr. DAYTON. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that as to our naval establishment we constantly add by the purchase of land.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Of course you do.

Mr. DAYTON. We have done so in the case of Bremerton, Washington, New York, and all the stations.

Mr. GROSVENOR. We buy land adjoining the property to extend the station already located, but will the gentleman point out the time and place where a new Army post was established on an appropriation bill in the House and land purchased and location brought about by legislation? And the same is true of a naval station.

Mr. DAYTON. I am not able to point out an instance of an Army post, but we purchased land at Algiers and established, as he says, a floating dry dock.

Mr. GROSVENOR. But no point of order was made.

Mr. DAYTON. We did that upon a simple report of a board of officers appointed under a similar authority to this, and not so strong as this.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Well, the gentleman has got into my speech. I simply state that in the case of Algiers, that he has cited as an authority, no point of order was made, and I state that upon the authority of a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. DAYTON. I have just cited the provision where the point of order was urged, and it was finally held that by reason of the report of this committee it was authorized by law, and the land was authorized.

Mr. GROSVENOR. And at the same time the gentleman has cited four other cases where the same proposition has been distinctly overruled.

Mr. DAYTON. No, no.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I am afraid that the gentleman on my right here [Mr. GROSVENOR], as a member of the Committee on Rules, was influenced somewhat in his action by his desire to have this station located on Lake Erie. I think that if the provision had been for the location at some point south of the forty-third parallel of latitude on Lake Erie there would not have been any difficulty about it, but it is a little too far west, and that is the reason why I want this provision to stay in this bill.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is not every amendment to an appropriation bill that is subject to this point of order. Amendments may be made. Our rules provide the character of amendments that may be made and when they may be made. No amendment, I take it, is subject to this point of order if the amendment proposed is in continuation of appropriations for a public work or object already in progress. Now, that is this case exactly. This is a continuation of an appropriation. An appropriation was made a year ago in part, and this is a continuation of it, as I learn from the gentleman.

Mr. DAYTON. Five thousand dollars.

Mr. HEPBURN. Five thousand dollars. Here we have the continuation of an appropriation and for a public work. Is this in progress? If the selection of a site is a necessary antecedent to the building of a work, then this is in progress. Now, the proper commission has been appointed to make a selection, and we are informed by the gentleman who just spoke upon this question that it has accomplished that work, made the selection, but for certain reasons has not disclosed it. Therefore I think that the gentleman from West Virginia is clearly right in his contention that it is not subject to the point of order.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, we all of us have standards of comparison and judgment. My friend from Iowa has one. He believes all men are selfish and sordid. His standard of comparison is his own conduct, and he measures others by himself. He does not believe that any public man is ever sincere or logical or honest in the advocacy of a position, and always looks around to see what selfish and personal motive actuates him. It is because the gentleman himself has no other standard of morality and judgment than that. [Laughter.]

Mr. HEPBURN. If the gentleman will permit me, he is in error. I draw the line at Ohio people. [Laughter.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Now, let me point out what is true, and he will remember it. It has not been but three years ago that there came an appropriation for a million dollars to carry on an investigation of the Nicaragua Canal. Now, the gentleman started, as I recollect, with about the same amount of selfishness that he does now. He denies it now. He did not then. He was then a pro bono publico advocate at that time. That was not a provision to carry on an existing work, although there had been more than a million dollars expended, and a report from a committee had been made establishing the Nicaragua route; but because we had not begun to dig in the ground it was held in this House that the amendment was not in order; that it was not a going work, not a work proceeding.

Now, the gentleman comes and says that because some commission now sitting, an appropriation for which was made, and there is no doubt about the appropriation being made, that therefore because the appropriation was made and because the committee has agreed on a report that it will not let anybody know—the gentleman seems to know; he seems to understand it—that therefore it is a going work, a work in progress, a work that has proceeded.

Well, suppose it is. I just make the supposition that it is a proceeding work. After giving jurisdiction and making an appropriation of enough money to buy a site, where? Where will it be bought; at what place will it be located? That is the test that is applied, a perfect test, the work done up to this time. The investigation has brought out the opinion from somebody that after a while there ought to be something done at some time or place, if you please. The next question is the right legislation looking to the carrying out of the proposition.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I have something of sympathy for the lapse of memory of my friend, and yet I do not propose to hold him responsible. I recognize the fact that I myself am getting old and that senility is to be my fate after awhile. [Laughter.] Therefore I am not disposed to be harsh; but I will take the liberty to remind the gentleman that I took the position on the question he cites that I take now. I want to ask him if it is not true that when we came to divide upon that question of whether the Chair ought to be overruled or should be sustained or not, the gentleman from Ohio voted by my side and stated that the Chair was wrong?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I did not.

Mr. HEPBURN. I think the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I did not. I opposed the proposition from the start. [Laughter.] Now, then, we have got senility on him. [Laughter.]

Mr. HEPBURN. Wait a moment. There is not any question in this in my own mind, but I am reminded by the gentleman, and my own recollection is reenforced by the fact that one of my neighbors suggested to me this very proposition that I put to the gentleman.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in all seriousness, is this a work begun, is it an object for which an appropriation has been made, and is this an appropriation, a continuing one, for an object? If it is, then in my judgment the gentleman's contention is an error.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the language contained in the appropriation act of last year can not be tortured into an authorization of a purchase for this site. It merely provides for a commission to investigate the establishment of a naval training station on the Great Lakes. In the last session of Congress, with Mr. SHERMAN, of New York, in the chair, it was held that an amendment to erect barracks for enlisted men at a navy-yard was subject to a point of order. The point was raised by the chairman of the committee. Here was a public work, here was something necessary for the comfort and the convenience of the enlisted men of the service, the Government owned the ground upon which the building was to be erected, and yet the Chair held that it was subject to the point of order. There is no authority, no provision of law, authorizing the acquisition of a site upon the Great Lakes for a naval training station. This is new legislation, pure and simple. The decision I refer to was made in the last session upon the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, this case reminds me somewhat of the old story of the Government agent sent to the Far West for the purpose of establishing a sawmill to saw lumber for use at some Army stations there. They heard from him regularly; that he had selected a site, and was building a mill, and he drew funds for that purpose. Finally the reports stopped, and they sent another agent to make an investigation. He reported that he found a dam by a mill site, but no mill by a dam site. [Laughter.]

As I understand the situation Congress has authorized a committee to select and report upon a site, but it has not purchased any site. This case is one degree removed from the one I have cited. The committee has not even reported its selection of a site. Therefore it seems to me there is no Government work in progress. Congress has not yet by legislation determined whether it will buy a site when the committee determines where one ought to be, and therefore there is no existing legislation to which this appropriation can apply or attach.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, the rules prohibit legislation upon appropriation bills, but such bills may contain appropriations for public works in progress. An appropriation bill may contain an appropriation for enterprises and improvements that have already been authorized by law. I take the position that the paragraph contained in the naval appropriation bill last year authorized this appropriation.

The commission provided for in that bill was not simply authorized to investigate and report its opinion upon the advisability of locating a naval training station on the Lakes, but it was appointed and imperatively required to investigate the situation and select a site for the station, and the conclusive inference from that law is that Congress had already settled the question—that a naval training station should be established on the Great Lakes.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman permit me a question at that point?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Suppose the commission had reported against the establishment of it?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The Commission had no such power. Congress gave the Commission no such discretion. Congress declared, almost as strong as it is possible for language to declare, that a naval training station should be established on the Great Lakes. That is the irresistible inference and implication from the language of the provision, and the only question confided to the Commission was the question of location. The Commission has now reported. Congress has committed itself by the legislation last year to the location of a naval training station somewhere upon the Great Lakes, and the Commission was only to select the particular place.

Mr. SHATTUC. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes.

Mr. SHATTUC. I have the naval bill here and I do not see any mention of the location. Will the gentleman tell me where it is?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The provision in the bill of last year authorizes the appointment of this board and charged it with the duty of selecting a site on the Great Lakes suitable for a naval training station, and having selected the site, if upon private land, to estimate its value. Now, the Commission appointed under the authority of that law made a preliminary report that, in their judgment, the station should be located upon the shores of Lake Michigan, below the parallel of 43° 30'.

Mr. SHATTUC. But it does not locate it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Has the gentleman any report like that?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I have: the report of the commission.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Where did it come from?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It was reported to the Senate by the Secretary of the Navy and printed as a Senate document. The commission reported that it would not be advisable nor in accordance with business propriety to locate specifically and publicly the training station because of the liability of the owners of the property to extort from the Government a higher price than it might otherwise be compelled to pay, and therefore they recommend an appropriation of $250,000 and that they be authorized to negotiate for the site.

That is the situation. The law practically declares it to be the purpose of Congress to locate the station, and provision was made for the appointment of the commission to make the location. That commission has acted, has made its report; and if there is not authority of law for this appropriation I should like to know what is necessary to create such authority.

Mr. OLMSTED. I understood the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. DAYTON] to say that the committee had reported a site.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The committee has reported; I have their report here.

Mr. DAYTON. They have not reported a site.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I mean to say that the committee has made a preliminary report fixing the general territory where the site ought to be established; but they say, as a matter of public policy, it is not advisable to announce a particular location. They indicate in a general way the available or eligible territory for the location of the establishment and ask an appropriation of $250,000 to enable them to proceed in a businesslike way to negotiate for the land within the most eligible and available section.

Mr. OLMSTED. I seem to have misunderstood the gentleman from West Virginia. As he was some distance from me, I did not hear him distinctly.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Let me submit this question, Mr. Chairman: Suppose that this provision had been embodied in an independent law—a law by itself—would any member of the House question the authority of the Naval Appropriations Committee to report an appropriation for this object? Would such a report be questioned on the ground that it was not authorized by law? And yet that case is identical with the one before us. The provision made in this instance, although embodied in an appropriation bill, has as much force as if it had been enacted independently of an appropriation bill. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that there is authority for the provision.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. No amendment is in order. A point of order is pending.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, I wish to be heard for a moment. This seems to be an item making a large appropriation, and I want to know the reason for it. I have just returned from lunch, and from what I have heard since my return I supposed the item was being discussed on its merits.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that there is a point of order pending. If the gentleman wishes to enlighten the Chair on the point of order, the Chair will be glad to hear him.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I am not quite positive that I can do so. It would be a hard undertaking, I know. But I should like to make an inquiry of the gentleman on the other side [Mr. CRUMPACKER], who has just addressed the committee, and I could not hear a word he said.

The CHAIRMAN. It might be difficult for the gentleman to enlighten the Chair if he does not know what the point of order is.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The Chair did not state it, so that I am, I admit, somewhat in ignorance as to it. Still, Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the gentleman who has just taken his seat [Mr. CRUMPACKER] why, if we are to have this naval station, it should be located on the lakes? Why not over on the Mississippi River?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I can not discuss the merits of the proposition while the point of order is pending.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I know that this inquiry has not much to do with the point of order, still I should like to have that information.

The CHAIRMAN. That matter can come up later.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. All right.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the argument of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] I wish to call attention to the exact language of the last act in regard to this naval training station. I agree with the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] that there is nothing in this language that can be properly construed to authorize the creation of a naval training station. The language merely authorizes an investigation and a report; and it specifically states that upon the reception of that report the action of Congress is to be taken, or words to that effect. I will read the language:

> The Secretary of the Navy is hereby directed to appoint a board composed of naval officers, whose duty it shall be to select on the Great Lakes a suitable site for an additional naval training station—

They are to select that site—

> And having selected such site, if upon private land, to estimate its value and ascertain, as nearly as practicable, the cost for which it can be purchased or acquired; and of their proceedings and actions to make full and detailed report to the Secretary, who shall transmit such report, with his recommendations thereon, to Congress for its action.

For what action of Congress? Why, sir, it seems to me the only construction that can be placed upon this is that when the report has been transmitted to Congress it shall then be for Congress to say—after having the recommendation of this board, with a description of the land, the price, and all the information that the board can lay before Congress—whether it will proceed to erect a naval training station there. What other action can be intended?

If Congress last year had intended to say that we shall have a training station at the Great Lakes, it would not have used any doubtful language. It would have positively declared its purpose to have this naval training station. But as Congress left the matter in this condition, with a naval board empowered to select a site, ascertain its price, and report all its proceedings to Congress with recommendations for the action of Congress, no other action, in my judgment, could have been intended than that Congress should then say, after getting this information, whether it would proceed further in the matter or not. In that view, Mr. Chairman, Congress heretofore not having taken action, it seems to me there is no law which authorizes this appropriation.

Mr. LESSLER. I should like to call the attention of the gentleman from North Carolina to Appendix A of this report, in which Secretary Moody says:

> SIR: A board, consisting of yourself, as senior member, and Civil Engineer Harry H. Rousseau, United States Navy, as member and recorder, is hereby appointed to examine the District of the Lakes for the purpose of fixing upon a site for a naval training station at a convenient point on the shores of those lakes.

Evidently the Secretary of the Navy does not agree with the gentleman's interpretation of the law.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, there is certainly nothing in that which contradicts the position I take. That board was to be selected for that purpose and the report was to be made for the action of Congress, and Congress has never yet acted upon it, and until Congress does act upon that report there will be no law, in my judgment, to authorize the appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts). It seems very clear to the Chair that if it were not for the legislation of last year this section would be subject to a point of order. The decisions are quite uniform on that subject. Take, for instance, the decisions with reference to dry docks, and even the Algiers case, cited by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. DAYTON]. The first time in that case the point of order was sustained. It was only afterwards overruled when some appropriation had already been made for purchase of land; so that it seems clear to the Chair that without the legislation of last year this point of order must be sustained.

The question then arises, Does the legislation of last year bring it within the rule, and is this a continuation of a work now in progress? The legislation of last year provided that a board should select a site, estimate its value, and report to Congress. It does not follow from this that Congress would appropriate for that site or would approve the action of the board, and this section in question provides not for the purchase of a selected or specific site, but for a site still to be selected. A work would not be considered begun, in the ordinary use of language, simply by an appropriation for a board which was to select a site and make a report which might or might not be acted upon favorably by Congress, so that, it would seem to the Chair, if there were no authority pertinent, that the legislation of last year would not be sufficient ground for this appropriation.

But there is extensive authority in the same line. The decision cited by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] as to the Nicaraguan Canal is very closely in point, and sustains the point of order. There was a decision last year in reference to an appropriation for a survey of a dam and site. The appropriation for the survey was held not to be the commencement of a work. The Chair also has before him a decision by Mr. Speaker Carlisle, which holds that the purchase of land for a building is not such a commencement of the work as to authorize an appropriation for that building. He says:

> The Chair has before him the act approved March 3, 1875, which authorized the purchase of a site for this building, but it confers on the Secretary of the Treasury no authority whatever to contract for the erection of a public building, and the Chair is therefore bound to rule the amendment out of order.

That is certainly a much stronger case than the one in question. The Chair, therefore, sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Purchase and manufacture of smokeless powder, $500,000.

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amend by adding after line 13 as an independent paragraph:
> "To enlarge smokeless-powder factory at Indian Head, Md., $55,000."

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to read somewhat from the hearings before the Committee on Naval Affairs. Admiral O'Neil testified we purchase about 8,000 pounds of smokeless powder a day and make 2,000 pounds. He stated that it cost us to manufacture powder 40 cents a pound and to buy it 80 cents a pound. In reply to a question asked him by Mr. Roberts—

> Can you tell us what the cost would be if we were to include those things?

referring to interest on plants, etc., he said:

> I suppose it would be about 10 cents more per pound. We have done that. We have figured the exact cost of the investment and everything else, and even then it is a great deal cheaper than you can buy it. Of course you can not expect to buy things without profit. People will not make them, and besides, powder making is a very hazardous business.

To the question by myself—

> If you were to enlarge your plant, how much of an appropriation would be necessary?

he replied:

> Fifty-five thousand dollars would enable us to increase the output to 5,000 pounds a day, and I should be glad if you would vote us that amount.

Mr. Chairman, increasing the output to 5,000 pounds a day would give us an additional manufacture of 3,000 pounds a day. At a saving of 40 cents a pound, that would make a saving to the Government of the United States of $400,000 in one year. It does seem to me that when we can invest $55,000 and save for the Government $400,000, it ought to be done. As shown, this recommendation has the approval of the admiral who has charge of the Ordnance Bureau.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Navy-yard, Washington, D. C.: For 1 chemist, at $2,500; 2 foremen of gun factory, at $2,200 each; 1 ordnance engineer and computing draftsman for gun factory, $3,000; 1 chief clerk, at $1,600; 1 clerk, at $1,400; 1 clerk, at $1,200; 1 clerk, at $1,100; 3 writers, at $1,017.25 each; 1 draftsman, at $1,800; 3 draftsmen, at $1,081 each; 1 assistant draftsman, at $772; 2 copyists, at $720 each; 1 telegraph operator and copyist, at $1,000; in all, $26,506.75.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill in reference to what is provided for on line 10, namely, 1 ordnance engineer and computing draftsman for gun factory. Is this a new officer? It is new in the bill.

Mr. FOSS. It is a new man.

Mr. CANNON. Has he never been employed?

Mr. FOSS. Never been employed.

Mr. CANNON. Who has been doing that work heretofore?

Mr. FOSS. I can not answer the gentleman just who has been doing it, but somebody down there. I desire, however, to call his attention to the letter, which appears in the hearings, of Admiral O'Neil. He says that the necessity for a permanent civilian employee of superior attainments in the Bureau of Ordnance at the naval gun factory is very pressing; that this Bureau is charged with the duty of designing guns, mounts, and turret fixtures, with all of their intricate details, and upon the successful operation of which the Navy depends. And the Secretary of the Navy also, in his hearing, on page 34, speaks of this, and it came to us in the regular estimates sent here by the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. DAYTON. I should like to answer the gentleman's question further.

Mr. CANNON. All right.

Mr. DAYTON. I think by reading a line or two further down you will find that that this duty has been performed by officers who have been detailed to that work. Under the present Administration the demand for officers has been so great that most of them have been sent to sea. Here was an instance where the work could be done by a civilian instead of a naval officer, and the services of a naval officer could be utilized elsewhere at sea. He says:

All such work must originate at the Bureau and be perfected at the Naval Gun Factory, and for its performance the Bureau has been dependent upon the services of such officers of the Navy as it could procure by detail from time to time.

Now he asks for a civilian employee and states the necessity for it to be the fact that it is important, and that he has no man to perform it except a naval officer to be detailed there.

Mr. CANNON. Now, in perfect good faith, is it not probable that there is an officer detailed that either has not the health or the ability to do the work, and that this is to employ somebody to do the work, in the shape of a clerk? I am not now throwing out any insinuation against the officer. That does happen sometimes.

Mr. DAYTON. I do not believe the gentleman's presumption is exactly right. I think that this work is of such importance and of such intricate detail that it requires an officer who has all his faculties and is in perfect good health. That gun factory is a pretty busy place, and I think it has been dependent upon the detail of one of our best ordnance officer experts, but that it can be very well supplied by a civilian who can take his place and enable the naval officer to go elsewhere.

Mr. CANNON. It is a pretty large salary to pay a draftsman, for that is what he is.

Mr. DAYTON. He is not a draftsman alone.

Mr. FOSS. Ordnance engineer and draftsman.

Mr. DAYTON. He is an ordnance engineer.

Mr. CANNON. Yes, that is what it says.

Mr. DAYTON. He says this:

These employees should be graduates of technical schools, and should possess a thorough knowledge of calculating strains and stresses in ordnance construction and fixing the proper dimensions of parts of guns, gun carriages, projectiles, etc.; calculations in exterior and interior ballistics; mechanical drawing and designing; practical application of the science of electricity and optics; architecture of shop building; installation, testing, and superintending the operation of steam and electrically operated machinery to meet given conditions, etc., and a good general knowledge of modern ordnance.

Mr. CANNON. Is the selection of this man under the civil-service rules?

Mr. LESSLER. Yes. The Admiral says that on page 21:

Mr. ROBERTS. Would you secure these additional employees through the Civil Service Commission?

Admiral O'NEIL. Yes, sir. We would have to have an examination for them, and have them compete for the places. There are two, one for the navy-yard and one for the Bureau of Ordnance. The fact is that to-day we can not get naval officers to do these things; everybody is at sea. I can not get enough officers to do the routine work of my Bureau.

Mr. CANNON. Three thousand dollars is a pretty high salary to pay for a man that would compete to be selected by the Commission.

The Clerk read as follows:

Coal and transportation: Purchase of coal for steamers' and ships' use and other equipment purposes, including expenses of transportation, storage, and handling the same, $2,500,000.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I should like to ask the gentleman reporting this bill from whom and where, and if possible, at what price is this coal bought? Here is a good deal of money for coal—about two and a half million dollars.

Mr. FOSS. The Navy Department pay $2.50 a ton. Where it is bought and when it is bought and how it is bought I have not the information to state.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. From whom was coal bought at that price?

Mr. FOSS. I do not know.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Where?

Mr. LESSLER. We made contracts last year.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman from New York tell me from whom it was bought?

Mr. FOSS. I am not familiar as to whether it was long ton or short ton, or any of the details as to the buying of coal, but I presume the gentleman from Tennessee can find all that information if he will send a note to the Navy Department or go down to the Department himself and investigate.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman should know, it seems to me. Will the gentleman from New York [Mr. LESSLER] tell me, as he has just stated that the Government bought coal at $2.50 a ton?

Mr. LESSLER. They made contracts last year. Now, with whom I do not know, and without an examination of the hearings I could not answer.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I am glad I made this inquiry. I see we are about to appropriate $2,500,000 for coal, and I am gratified at the information furnished by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSS] that we have bought our coal for $2.50 a ton.

Mr. LESSLER. The gentleman will find that information as to the price of coal on page 29 of the hearings given to Admiral Bradford.

The Department is now paying $2.50 a ton, f. o. b. at Norfolk, for Pocahontas coal, and $2.43 a ton, f. o. b. at Baltimore, for Georges Creek coal.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Two dollars and a half a ton? From whom does he say this coal was bought?

Mr. LESSLER. "These contracts were with the best coal companies in the United States," this report says, but Admiral Bradford does not give any name.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am very glad I made the inquiry, because it satisfies me the Government has not been held up by any parties in the purchase of coal for our Navy as the American people have been held up this winter by the coal combines and the railroads and the various other cormorants and scoundrels—I started to say thieves, and I will without making any apology, because the man who held up his neighbor and allowed his neighbor and his children to freeze is not as good as the man who is put in the penitentiary for an offense. I wish we could in this bill bar every one of them from selling an ounce of coal to the Government.

I said a few days ago, in reply to an inquiry made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER], that in the State of Pennsylvania there were six railroads in a "coal combine," combined to control the output of coal, combined to control the wages of the men employed in digging it, combined in the hauling of it, combined on the question of freights, and combined against the people—from the time of digging it from the bowels of the earth until sold in the East at Boston, where the people have been suffering, and sold in New York, where also they have been suffering. The gentleman from Pennsylvania said he did not know of any combination in that State.

Now, I cite the gentleman to page 865 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 16, 1903, where a Congressional committee that had investigated that question in 1893 found that six great railroads operating in Pennsylvania controlled the output of the coal in the State of Pennsylvania, controlled the mines, controlled the men that worked them, owned the coal, controlled the coal and the hauling of it, and were in a combination for the purpose of putting up coal, and are doing so now. I give that statement from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at this place.

I will read from the RECORD as cited:

We have further here quotations from the report of the Congressional committee made to Congress in 1893, in which the statement appears:

"The committee, after a careful investigation, has come to the conclusion that the railroad companies engaged in mining and transporting coal are practically in a combination to control the output and fix the prices which the public pays for this important and necessary article of consumption. The combination is not confined to the Philadelphia and Reading and the Lehigh Valley, but embraces all the railroads connecting the anthracite region with tide water. There is substantially no competition existing between these companies. The only limitation to their demands is the indisposition on the part of the public to buy their product at an exorbitant price."

That was in reference to the conditions nine years ago. Now Mr. Shearn goes on to ask (1903):

"Now what is the situation? The same situation precisely, except that it is more aggravated. They have attempted to get around the law by this subterfuge. They have bought the control of the stock of the Central Railroad of New Jersey. The Reading Company now owns a majority of the stock of the Central Railroad of New Jersey. The officials of the Central Railroad of New Jersey resigned. All of its directors resigned; but we find now in that new order of things the president of the Reading is the president of the Central. The offices are in the same building. The directors are the same men. They are engaged in the same line of business, but there is no more competition between them; and they have accomplished by virtue of the buying up of the stock of the Central the same thing that Chancellor McGill denounced and that the Congressional committee found resulted in a combination in restraint of trade in 1893."

The Attorney-General of the United States knows this, and yet he fails to crush this trust under the antitrust act of 1890.

Now, I am very glad, I really rejoice, Mr. Chairman, that the Government of the United States, upon the statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSS], has escaped these cormorants thus far. I am glad that there is somewhere, somehow, some individual, even if it is Uncle Sam, who has escaped the clutches and the greed of the coal barons and coal kings of this country. I hope this may be true during the next year, but I doubt it. I shall wait and watch.

I am very sorry that the gentleman could not tell me from what coal company we have been buying this coal at $2.50 a ton. At one time we had to burn wood to warm this House, and the Post-Office Department came very near having to stop the furnaces in the Post-Office because coal could not be had, not at $2.50 a ton, but could not get it at $12 or $15 a ton—any price. For the Government to have escaped this one time in its life from being skinned by the trusts, by these coal barons and coal kings, is a thing that we ought to congratulate ourselves upon, and I am especially delighted that we have brought this information to light.

Taking the duty off coal a few weeks ago has reduced, I am told, the price of coal. The very fact of foreign coal coming here helped to do this, and the actual coming here of fleet after fleet of foreign coal from foreign countries has aided in relieving the people somewhat. Greater would have been the relief had the antitrust laws of Pennsylvania and of the United States been enforced. But they were not.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 17288, the naval appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Yesterday I submitted for the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] an amendment proposing to make a payment to the estate of Solomon Hirsch, deceased, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, and it was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I find, upon inquiry, that it should have gone to the Committee on Foreign Relations. Therefore I ask that that change of reference be made.

Mr. CULLOM. I will state to the Senator from Kansas that the same amendment was acted upon by the Committee on Foreign Relations this morning, and it has been favorably reported by me and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BURTON. Very well.

JOHN S. WHITLEGE.

Mr. DEBOE. I am directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1605) granting a pension to John S. Whitlege, to report it favorably without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of John S. Whitlege, late of Company F, Twenty-eighth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and to pay him a pension of $12 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Resolved, That 500 copies of the document on the establishment and government of the District of Columbia be printed for the use of the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the cost exceed the limit of $500?

Mr. GALLINGER. It will cost a small amount, I will say to the Senator. The plates are at the Printing Office.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

STATEHOOD BILL.

Mr. QUAY. I submit a resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas House bill 12543, to enable the people of Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico to form constitutions and State governments and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, has been under discussion in the Senate since the 10th day of December last, and must fail unless voted upon at an early date:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that by unanimous consent a date and hour prior to the 2d of March next should be fixed for a final vote upon the bill and all amendments that are pending or may be offered thereto.

Mr. ALDRICH. Let the resolution go over under the rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the resolution goes over under the rule.

ELMER E. FORESHAY.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate——

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the resolution I offered yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted on the 16th instant by Mr. DUBOIS, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Civil Service Commission is hereby directed to furnish to the United States Senate a statement of the charges and evidence on account of which Elmer E. Foreshay was dismissed from the surveyor-general's office of Idaho.

Also, whether under the ruling of the civil service he is eligible to any other position in the Government service.

STATEHOOD BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will withdraw for the present the resolution which has just been read, and lay before the Senate the resolution submitted by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY], coming over from yesterday.

The resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. QUAY was read, as follows:

Whereas the bill (H. R. 12543) to enable the people of Oklahoma, Arizona, and New Mexico to form constitutions and State governments and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States has been under discussion in the Senate since the 10th day of December last, and must fail unless voted upon at an early date:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that by unanimous consent a date and hour prior to the 2d of March next should be fixed for a final vote upon the bill and all amendments that are pending or may be offered thereto.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate agree to the resolution?

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I doubt very much if Senators who examine carefully the resolution which was introduced a day or two ago, or this resolution, will care to vote for it. The resolution introduced yesterday or day before yesterday is really a resolution inviting a majority of the Senate to vote for a cloture rule. The Senator from Pennsylvania disclaims that purpose, but it is impossible for him to escape the conclusion that that would be its effect.

Why is it that the Senator, with a majority of the Senate back of him, as he claims (and I think the Senator is not likely to be mistaken in his opinion as to whether he has a majority back of him in the Senate or anywhere else), can not bring or has not been able to bring this bill to a vote? It is because under the rules of the Senate a single objection can prevent a vote as long as there is a desire on the part of members of the Senate to debate the bill. Now, that may be an unhappy situation. Some Senators think it is. Other Senators think in the long run and taking it by and large it is not. I am one of the latter.

The Senator's proposition was that a majority of the Senate should say that a day ought to be fixed before the end of this Congress for taking this vote. That could only be done by a change of the rules.

Mr. QUAY. By unanimous consent.

Mr. SPOONER. That could only be done by a change of the rules.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. QUAY. I desire to say that I stated distinctly at the time that there was no intention of pushing a cloture upon the resolution; that the only method by which a vote could be reached was by unanimous consent. I stated that yesterday, and I amended the resolution to meet the objection of the Senator from Wisconsin, and it is that resolution which is now before the Senate.

Mr. SPOONER. I am discussing the other resolution.

Mr. QUAY. I suggest to the Senator that he had better discuss the one now pending.

Mr. SPOONER. I discuss what I choose, when I have the floor, without the consent of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. QUAY. All right; the Senator can discuss what he pleases.

Mr. SPOONER. I will not be told what I had better discuss.

Mr. QUAY. Then the Senator will accomplish no purpose.

Mr. SPOONER. I will accomplish what I want to accomplish, and I will not be long about it, either, for I am not speaking for the purpose of obstruction.

No matter what the Senator intended by his resolution, we are to judge by the resolution itself what is involved in it. He asked the Senate by a majority vote to declare that a time should be fixed before the end of this session for taking a vote. That could not possibly be done without a change of the rule. It would involve, of course, a cloture; and it amounted to a proposition that in the judgment of a majority of the Senate there should be a cloture.

There was a time when I was in favor of a cloture. I have been a member of this body now for twelve years. I have been very constant in my attendance upon its sessions; I have been somewhat active in all controverted matters which have been before the Senate. I have seen times when members of this body, impelled, not by partisanship, but only by the strongest possible motives of conscience, felt constrained to resist the passage of measures which they thought were unconstitutional, or which they thought, if constitutional and passed, would be subversive of great public interests.

I am frank to admit that years ago, when I was first a member of the Senate and a struggle of that kind came, I was very restive under it. I thought that a minority ought not to be able to obstruct the passage of legislation.

But, Mr. President, I do not believe there is any legislative body in this world which accomplishes as much in a deliberate, thoughtful, and careful way as the Senate accomplishes under its existing rules. The very freedom which is accorded to Senators here assures debate, which would not occur if we had a previous question. There would of necessity be an exclusion of many from debate.

I have often seen in the newspapers and I have often heard it said that debate is of no effect in this body. That is not true. I appeal to every Senator here if the contrary is not true, as is shown at every session repeatedly upon full debate, because Senators desire here to get at the right. Sometimes we are constrained by political prejudice and more or less of partisanship where proposed legislation may have a political phase, but in the matters of legislation almost universally debate in this body has had great weight, and many members have risen and acknowledged a change of view because of a discussion which has taken place. It would be quite absurd to have it understood that debate is of no consequence here.

This power to stop the hasty passage of bills by a single objection in the afternoon sometimes when we take up the Calendar has been of infinite benefit to the country. We rely largely upon committees. Sometimes the committees act hastily and improvidently—all the committees. Sometimes bills are reported along toward the end of the session by a poll of the members of the committee, and it has often happened that objection to a bill has delayed it for an hour until the Senator in charge could explain it; and it has often happened the delay brought about a conference which disclosed a defect in the bill which was remedied by amendment.

It is true that when a bill is objected to by a single Senator it is possible, under the rules, to move to proceed to its consideration. I appeal to Senators that that rarely becomes necessary, and by common consent, as a rule, when a measure is objected to it goes over for examination, and that delay seldom fails to be useful.

For one I have become convinced that under the rules of the Senate as they are, the interest of the public, of the whole country, is better subserved than it would be had we a cloture.

Now, this proposition has been amended, admitting by the amendment the justice of the criticism which was made upon the other resolution. What does it call upon the Senate to do? It calls upon the Senate practically to put a vote of censure upon those gentlemen who are members of this body who happen to be conscientiously opposed to this measure as it stands. Is a majority of the Senate prepared to do that? Is not that a novel proposition?

Recurring to what occurred in a former term, I remember when Senators on the other side of the Chamber, and some upon this side, were unwilling to permit what was called the force bill to come to a vote. I favored the force bill, as it was miscalled, for as we amended it in our committee there was nothing in it which justified that characterization of it. There was a majority in the Senate, I believed then and believe now, in favor of that bill. I never doubted for one moment the sincerity of gentlemen on the other side in their opposition to it, nor did I challenge their sincerity in the belief that they wrought a patriotic purpose in refusing to permit us to pass it.

If at that time some one on this side had introduced such a resolution resolving that it is the sense of the Senate that by unanimous consent a day and hour prior to the 2d of March next should be fixed for a final vote on the Federal election bill and all amendments thereto, what would have been thought about it on the other side? A vote of censure by a majority here upon any man who saw fit to exercise the right which the rules give him to object to a vote; an impeachment by a majority of the Senate because they happen to differ with a large and conscientious minority upon the merits of the measure; an impeachment almost of the motives of any man who rises here under the rules, as he has a right to do, to object.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, may I make one suggestion to my honorable friend?

Mr. SPOONER. I am always glad to get a suggestion from the Senator.

Mr. HOAR. It is one of fact. I would not presume, of course, to suggest anything to the Senator by way of argument. I had the charge of that bill, the election bill, which had no more of an element of force in it than the taking of a census has.

Mr. SPOONER. That is right.

Mr. HOAR. But I am satisfied, I think I know, that if there had been a vote when the bill first came up it would have had a majority of the Senate. However, in the progress of the discussion——

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, we can not hear the Senator on this side.

Mr. HOAR. If there had been a vote——

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, can we not have a little order? We can not hear the Senator in this part of the Chamber.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts will suspend until order is restored. Senators will resume their seats.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I was saying that I had the charge in the Senate, as chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, of the bill known as the force bill, which was a bill providing for watching the elections as it was reported, and had no more element of force in it than the taking of a census has. But I am satisfied that if there had been a vote on the bill when it was first reported it would have had a majority of the Senate in its favor. If there had been a vote on that bill at the end of the session, at the end of the discussion, it would have been beaten by a majority. In other words, the progress of the discussion, in my judgment, changed the majority in the Senate in regard to that bill.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, one word. The fact with regard to it was that it was twice displaced by calling up other measures. In December the silver bill was called up and displaced it by a vote, and finally, in February, the apportionment bill was called up and it got a majority and displaced the other measure by a vote.

Mr. HOAR. The fact as to that bill, as I understand it, absolutely supports the contention of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. HALE. And if there had been then, as some Senators believed there ought to have been, a previous question, there would have been no opposition that could have stopped the passage of the bill, and the change in sentiment the Senator from Massachusetts has referred to, which undoubtedly took place, never would have taken place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin will proceed.

Mr. SPOONER. Now, Mr. President, I have said about all I wish to say on this resolution. It accomplishes nothing. It does not change any rule of the Senate. If adopted, it does not move the statehood bill one moment nearer a vote under the rules of the Senate. It has but one possible effect, and that is to put upon the record the judgment of every Senator who votes for it, censuring any Senator who under the rules objects to a vote. I think it is a bad beginning.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I am myself very much in favor of the statehood bill and prepared to do anything which I think is just and consistent with my duty here to further that object. I agree with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], the chairman of the Committee on Rules, as to the desirability of maintaining in this body the right of free discussion. I have myself had occasion in the number of years I have served here to see the advantage of it.

I agree with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] that the bill, which he thinks did not have any element of force in it, would have become a law if we had had a cloture rule. I myself was an active opponent of that bill. If it did not have the element of force in it, it had in it, in my judgment at that time, the element of fraud, and created an opportunity for dishonest people to meddle with elections. But I do not care to discuss that question. I believe that discussion created a sentiment and belief in this body—and it was very much of the character which has been expressed in the debate which is going on here this morning—that it was not wise to pass that bill. While that bill was not voted on directly, the men who voted to displace it were the men who would have voted against it if there had been a vote taken upon it.

Mr. President, I have been a little restive sometimes, and probably once or twice I have said some things which I ought not to have said as to the length of the discussion on the statehood bill, but I myself will not vote for anything, directly or indirectly, which will indicate the right of the majority to censure the minority, or that will look directly or indirectly to any method, either legal or moral, which may prevent any Senator from exercising his judgment in securing delay whenever he thinks he ought to do so.

I believe that there ought to be somewhere in the Government of this country a place where unrestricted and untrammeled debate may be had. I believe it was the purpose of the creation of this body that deliberation and thought and delay might be secured for great questions which might for the time being unduly agitate the public mind, either because of intense partisanship or for any other reason, and I believe that there is nothing which can so secure to the American people righteous and just legislation as the right on this floor to discuss in every way and to delay by every method which shall meet the approval of Senators acting under oath all bills or measures which they think are improper and unwise.

I was delighted to hear the chairman of the Committee on Rules say what he has said this morning. I believe he expresses the best thought of this body when he says that he is in favor of untrammeled debate and unrestricted obstruction when, in the judgment of Senators, such a course is necessary.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Rules.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine moves that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is that a debatable proposition, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I merely want to say that I heartily concur in what the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] have said.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I want to say that I am very glad that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] introduced this resolution, because it has given opportunity for the expression of views by leading Senators here which I think will be of priceless value to the Senate in the future. I think, Mr. President, the utterances which we have heard here to-day will finally put at rest the question whether the Senate will ever adopt, at least in our day, a cloture rule.

Mr. President, there are three distinguishing features of this body which I think justify the expression which we so frequently hear, that this is the greatest deliberative body in the world. One of them, of course, we all recognize in the fact that we are a part of the executive of this great nation; another is the fact that there is equal representation of the States here, and that the membership of this body, except in the increase of States, can never be either increased or diminished, and the third which I have in mind is the right to unlimited debate, without which, Mr. President, neither of the other two would entitle us to the high rank which we claim for the Senate.

I only rose, Mr. President, for the purpose of giving expression to the gratification which, as a member of the minority party in this body, I feel at the expressions which have been given to us to-day by leading members of the majority, those who have the power to control if the power of the majority is attempted to be ruthlessly exercised.

I agree most heartily with my distinguished friend from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] in commending the utterances which we have heard, and I express my most thorough concurrence therewith.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I should have said nothing, Mr. President, if the observations which have fallen from the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] and other Senators here did not impel me to say at this time in a very few words that I do not agree with them in the assertion of their opinion that there should be no rule adopted in this Senate for reasonably limiting debate here. I do not wish to enlarge upon it at this time.

I do not think the resolution of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] which has been introduced has been introduced at a time when this question can be raised and discussed temperately and carefully; but I have always been of the opinion that some rule limiting debate might be adopted in this Senate which would not cut off the right of the minority, which would not interfere with the real rights and privileges of any Senator to properly debate a subject which might be pending before the Senate.

I do not believe in absolute, untrammeled debate when it reaches the point of obstruction; and I think we may well consider as to whether there is not some method in which debate can be restrained within reasonable limits and not allowed to run to the limit of intentional obstruction.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, if it was not the intention of the mover of this resolution to indirectly limit debate upon the statehood bill and to place a restraint upon the rights of Senators under the rules and under the Constitution, then its introduction and consideration is a farce and nothing else. If the Senator's resolution simply means that if unanimous consent can be secured it ought to be secured, then it has no purpose here. If the intention is by this indirect method to change the rules of the Senate and to say to Senators you can not exercise your rights under the rules, then I say the resolution should not be adopted.

In the contest to which the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] has referred, I was the chairman of the Committee on Rules and reported rules placing a limitation upon debate. At that time and at other times in my earlier service in the Senate I believed that such restriction was necessary, but from my experience in the Senate and my knowledge that very rarely, if ever, has the Senate by delay and by discussion defeated a measure that should have been adopted, I am free to confess with the Senator from Wisconsin to-day that I should not vote for any rule or resolution which would undertake to place restrictions upon debate, because I believe that in the long run the Senate will arrive at a wise conclusion on all questions submitted to its decision.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, when I entered the Senate I came here fresh from the greatest contest that had been made in the House of Representatives, certainly in this generation, and which involved the question of closure or of the previous question. Stated more broadly, the issue was whether the majority in the House of Representatives was to transact any business at all. The House of Representatives, when I entered it, was under the old system of rules, and had fallen into a condition where practically one man could arrest the business of the House by an apt use of complicated rules and long roll calls. I was in the House which revised the old rules and adopted what were known as the Reed rules, which, in my judgment, were the salvation of the House of Representatives and of its position as a legislative body, for under the old rules it had fallen into a state of almost complete inanity. Therefore I came to this body with a very strong prejudice in favor of vigorous and prompt methods of closing debate.

I entered the Senate with all these opinions very strongly upon me, and I remember on August 7, 1893, or immediately afterwards, when we assembled in extra session, I introduced a resolution to compel the Committee on Finance immediately to report a bill for the repeal of the Sherman law, moved thereto by the discipline which I had received in the House. That motion was met by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] as an impossible method of procedure, and with much the same argument that he has repeated here to-day.

Mr. President, I have been here since then for ten years. In a very short time after my coming into this body, within a year or two, in fact, I came to the conclusion that the practice of the Senate was on the whole a wise one, and though hard at times to bear when we are interested in passing a bill and grow naturally impatient, that it was the safest system for the country and for the general interests of the Government. Mr. President, I have seen in that short time both parties in control of the Senate, and I do not remember that any measure desired by an actual and true majority of the Senate has ever failed of a vote.

In the first session of the Senate a previous question was adopted which could be applied, by a majority vote, if moved and seconded from the floor. In 1806 the Senate struck that provision from the rules, and for a hundred years has never reenacted it. I think the principle involved, therefore, ought not to be lightly set aside, for there is much to be said in behalf of the practice of a hundred years. Moreover, Mr. President, as I was just saying, in that long period and in late years it has been clear that the majority of the Senate always gets a vote when it is a real majority.

Mr. President, I believe thoroughly in majority rule. I had that lesson borne in upon me in my service in the House of Representatives; but those who invoke majority rule, Mr. President, must not begin by overthrowing it. This country intrusts the Government to one political party or the other, and the party in power is responsible for the Government, and is the majority party. If a bill passes this Congress, it makes no difference by what combination of votes it passes, the party in power at the moment, which now happens to be the Republican party, is held responsible for it, even if the great mass of their Members and Senators voted against it.

A bill, for example, came to this table the other day from the other House settling the currency of the Philippine Islands. It was passed there by the minority party acting with a small fraction of the majority party; that is, the party to whom was intrusted the Government of the country was, under that vote, to be made responsible for a measure to which the great majority of its members objected, and which they did not believe in.

Therefore, Mr. President, a majority in this Senate must be something more than a numerical majority at any given moment, and there must be time to develop the fact whether it is a genuine and responsible majority, and also whether votes can not be changed.

I was deeply and profoundly interested in the force bill, as it was called, which has been alluded to here. I had it in charge in the House of Representatives and I saw it defeated on this floor by methods of obstruction, which resulted finally in the change of votes which has been here alluded to. But, Mr. President, I had much rather take the chances of occasional obstruction than to put the Senate in the position where bills could be driven through under rules which may be absolutely necessary in a large body like the House of Representatives or the House of Commons in England, but which are not necessary here. I think here we should have, minority and majority alike, the fullest possible opportunity of debate.

I myself have never indulged in obstruction and I have no desire to indulge in it now, but I think, Mr. President, that it would be the height of unwisdom to pass a resolution like this and open the way to a closure rule, which is what this resolution does, and which is a matter of the utmost gravity, without more consideration than can be given in the morning hour. Those whom it most behooves to oppose such resolutions as this are the party of the minority, for it is the minority whose rights are at stake and whose last protection is found on the floor of this Senate.

Mr. MCCOMAS. Mr. President, I offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the resolution, so that if the resolution shall go to the Committee on Rules this amendment may go with it. I do not desire to have it read nor to debate it.

It seems to me that if the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] is right—that there should be a time for voting on the statehood bill, because, as he alleges, a majority are for it—then there should come a time for voting on all bills if a majority favor those bills. So I have offered as a substitute a proposition long ago submitted by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT]. I desire that the substitute may go to the committee with the resolution. Certainly a rule that is good for one day ought to be good for all days; a rule that is good for the statehood bill ought to be good for every important measure in this body. I oppose the statehood bill, but I concede and believe from observation in the other House and from brief observation here that a rule which would apply to all bills, so that at some time a majority could have them considered and voted on, is proper and orderly, and the proposition I now offer as an amendment is for the orderly procedure with and the final disposition of questions which a majority in this body desire to have passed.

Mr. HALE. I rise to a parliamentary question, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine will state his parliamentary question.

Mr. HALE. I suppose, if the motion which I have made carries, that the resolution and any amendment pending to it will go to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. BATE. I rise to a parliamentary question, Mr. President. Do I understand the Senator objects to a discussion of this question? Does he want to put a cloture rule on us now?

Mr. HALE. Oh, no; I only raised a question as to whether, if my motion prevails, it will not carry not only the resolution of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY], but any amendment offered to it to the Committee on Rules. Of course I do not desire to interfere with debate, and I do not insist on my motion being put now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No amendment like the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS] is in order, the motion to refer having been made. If the motion to refer should be withdrawn, then the Senator from Maryland could offer his amendment as a substitute for the pending resolution, and then if a motion were made to refer and it were adopted it would carry with it both the original resolution and the amendment.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection under those conditions, Mr. President, to temporarily withdrawing my motion and letting the Senator from Maryland put in his amendment. After that I will renew the motion.

Mr. MCCOMAS. I shall be very glad to have the Senator do that. I have no desire to debate the proposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Chair understand that the motion to refer the resolution is withdrawn for the present?

Mr. HALE. For the present.

Mr. MCCOMAS. I now offer the amendment to which I have referred as a substitute for the resolution.

Mr. BURROWS. Let the amendment be read.

Mr. HALE. It has been read, I think.

Mr. BURROWS. No, it has not been read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland has not been read. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposod to substitute for the resolution of Mr. QUAY the following:

Resolved, That the rules of the Senate be amended by adding thereto the following:

When any bill, resolution, or other question shall have been under consideration for a reasonable time, it shall be in order for any Senator to demand that debate thereon be closed. On such demand no debate shall be in order, and pending such demand no other motion except one motion to adjourn shall be made. If such demand be seconded by a majority of the Senators present, the question shall forthwith be taken thereon without debate. If the Senate shall decide to close debate on any bill, resolution, or other question, the measure shall take precedence of all other business whatever, and the question shall be put upon the amendments, if any then pending, and upon the measure in its successive stages according to the rules of the Senate, but without further debate, except that every Senator who may desire shall be permitted to speak upon the measure, including all amendments, not more than once, and not exceeding thirty minutes.

After the Senate shall have decided to close debate as herein provided, no motion shall be in order but a motion to adjourn or to take a recess, when such motions shall be seconded by a majority of the Senate. When either of said motions shall have been lost or shall have failed of a second, it shall not be in order to renew the same until one Senator shall have spoken upon the pending measure or one vote upon the same shall have intervened.

Pending proceedings under the foregoing rule no proceeding in respect of a quorum shall be in order until it shall have appeared on a division or on the taking of the yeas and nays that a quorum is not present and voting.

Pending proceedings under the foregoing rule all questions of order, whether upon appeal or otherwise, shall be decided without debate, and no obstructive or dilatory motion or proceedings of any kind shall be in order.

For the foregoing stated purposes the following rules, namely, VII, VIII, IX, X, XII, XIX, XXII, XXVII, XXVIII, XXXV, and XL are modified.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I now move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Rules.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, I desire to say only a few words on the pending resolution. I want to emphasize what has already been so well said by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], and other Senators.

I wish also to say that I believe I represent every Senator on our side of the Chamber when I state that there is not a single one of us who would vote for anything that contained anything in the direction of cloture. We oppose it. We believe in the freedom of debate to the fullest possible extent, as we always have done, and especially, as has been said, when this is perhaps the only legislative body in the world where that privilege is so extensive.

Mr. President, in regard to the resolution which has been presented here by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] I wish to say that I see nothing in it tending toward a cloture rule. It occurs to me that that Senator had no such idea when he penned that resolution and presented it. In other words, it is very clear that the resolution is in almost the exact language which that Senator has been using here every morning for nearly a month, asking that a given day be assigned by unanimous consent for the purpose of securing a vote upon the pending omnibus statehood bill. That is the language used in the resolution.

That unanimous consent, Mr. President, is one of the most sacred obligations which the Senate has, and I am glad to say that in the sixteen years I have had the honor of a seat in this body I have never known a unanimous-consent understanding to be violated. Everyone respects it as sacred and solemn and stands to it to the last; and the resolution submitted by the Senator from Pennsylvania has that language in it, "by unanimous consent." A single Senator could object to it.

But, Mr. President, I go farther. I will say that I do not desire to do anything that will cause Senators to feel restive and uneasy or to feel that this resolution is a reflection upon them. I do not desire to be a party to anything of that kind. I want them to have a clear idea of the propriety of their action and to exercise that idea in their own way. I do not wish for one to criticise them for it. Therefore, although I see nothing objectionable in it, I am willing to vote for the motion to refer the resolution to the Committee on Rules. I have no objection to that, but I do not want to impinge on the rights of any Senator. I do not believe that this proposition amounts to anything more than what has been done here ever since we have had the statehood bill under discussion for more than two months, when the Senator from Pennsylvania has risen in his seat every morning at the termination of the routine morning business and put the same proposition in substance to the Senate which is embodied in the resolution desiring unanimous consent.

I do not understand that there is anything in the resolution which indicates that it tends to the adoption of a cloture rule; but, notwithstanding that, I shall, for the reasons I have stated, vote for its reference to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, I would not even by indirection vote for a cloture rule, and I am willing to assume that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] represent the views of the other side in their declarations against a cloture. I honor and respect the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], who now has before the Senate a resolution limiting debate, rather a drastic resolution, of which he says he is in favor; but I rise chiefly to dissent totally from the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who proposes the most partisan and indefensible scheme that I ever heard presented here.

The Senator from Massachusetts says that if the majority of the Senate on any question does not belong to the majority party in the body it is not a real and bona fide majority, but that the majority of the majority party has the right to decide what measures shall pass. In the House of Representatives, as an illustration, he cites a recent case in the passage of the Philippine currency bill by that body, when the minority in politics joined with a few members of the majority in politics and passed the bill. He objects to that. I would call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to the fact that the majority of the Senate when the Sherman law was repealed were not the majority party. That majority consisted of a small number of the majority party added to most of the minority party, and this majority repealed the Sherman Act.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator will allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. DUBOIS. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. They represented the Administration which had been elected by a majority of the people of this country and which was responsible for its government.

Mr. DUBOIS. Oh!

Mr. LODGE. And the combination of Democrats and Republicans was supporting the Administration, which favored the repeal of the Sherman Act and was responsible for the government.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, the fact remains that the Democratic party was in the majority in number in this body when that repeal bill was passed, and a large majority of the Democratic Senators were against that repeal. A minority of them joined with the almost solid Republican vote and passed it.

The Senator from Massachusetts was criticising severely the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] by indirection, and yet the same situation exists now in regard to this bill as then existed in regard to the repeal of the Sherman Act. The Senator says that unless the majority in favor of a bill belongs to the majority party it does not reflect the genuine sentiment of the responsible majority. His language was very nice, it was very clever; but that is exactly what he meant and that is what he said. I dissent from that.

If a majority of this body—I do not care to what party they belong—think it is for the best interests of the country to pass a bill, they ought to be allowed to vote on it and it ought not to be necessary for all of them to belong to the majority party; otherwise the political minority in this Chamber might just as well go home. If you give a license to the minority, provided that minority belongs to the majority party, to kill a bill by filibustering, we might as well have no rules at all.

But the logic, the sequence, of that proposition is that if the opposition is confined to one side of the Chamber or to the other, then it ought to be held up and made to submit to the will of the majority. Yet, if the majority is composed of those on both sides of the Chamber and if the majority of the dominant party should be the minority in that discussion, then that minority has a perfect right to prevent and ought to prevent legislation. I dissent from any such doctrine on this floor.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, I think this is an opportune time to again call attention to resolutions I have introduced annually for the last six years providing for an amendment to the rules.

This is the only deliberative body in the world where the minority controls legislation. This is the only body in the world where a member of the minority can take the floor and by reason of Senatorial courtesy set his vocal organs at work for a week at a time without any intellectual exercise. [Laughter.] And it is marvelous to me to see with what rapidity our hearts and sentiments change when, in the hurly-burly of politics, we are shifted from the minority to the majority. When I am in the minority in this body I expect other Senators to treat me with great consideration, to watch carefully and see that all of my bills are passed without discussion, and that I never am refused unanimous consent for anything I ask. But when I am in the majority my sentiments and conditions are changed. I approach the minority who are engaged in filibustering—to call it by a little more gentle name, dilatory tactics—with the greatest care and consideration.

The minority is the great part of this body, and it is the only body in the world where the minority stops legislation and prevents the majority—notwithstanding the boast of the Republic is that it is a country of majorities—from exercising its will. The rule of the majority prevails in every body, from the lowest legislative body in the nation to the supreme tribunal. In the Supreme Court of the United States, when a majority of those eminent jurists pass upon a question, that majority opinion becomes the law of the land and the minority bows to it.

Here we are in this situation again and again. Day after day three new States are knocking at the door; the majority of the Senate is for the measure, but the minority says, "No; let us wait; let us talk; let us have more vocal exercise," in order to prevent the expression of the will of the majority here. Here, pending before this body, is the treaty providing for the construction of that great canal from ocean to ocean. A majority are for it, but a minority say, "No; unless you move out of your minorityship on another measure and let us vote for statehood, we will not play in your back yard and let you vote for the canal treaty." Dignified gentlemen, in a dignified body, permitting the minority to govern our course of conduct!

Gentlemen say that legislation is always reached when a majority is for it. I deny it. I assert that the graveyard of legislation is full of legitimate legislation asked for by the people, abandoned because one man in the minority says, "I shall feel obliged to take the floor for a week or two on that bill if you call it up." Mr. President, I am sorry thus to find fault, but I say that the time never will come in this country when the Senate of the United States can transact its business until you provide a plan so that the majority may govern.

It is not necessary to cut off debate or unduly to limit debate. The rules which have been propounded here, even the one suggested by the distinguished Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], contemplate giving ten days, twenty days, thirty days. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY], who has asked you to vote upon the pending statehood measure, offered to give you thirty days' debate. But no; you are not ready. It is the love of power. I have learned it. I like it when I am with the minority. It is a splendid thing. It is glorious to stand in the minority and say the majority shall not act. It is a delightful habit we have of drawing the cloak of hypocrisy around us and saying, "We are not filibustering." But we know we are, and you know it, and they all know it, and the country knows it.

To-day we could have voted and passed the canal treaty a dozen times over; the statehood bill could have been beaten or passed twenty times over after full and fair debate; but the truth is that this love of power which, when a man is in the minority, enables him to put the brake on the train regardless of the order of the general superintendent has filled the legislative graveyard of the country, and, in my opinion, it will not be corrected until the people of the United States so shape their Constitution that the Senators in this body will owe their seats to, and answer directly to, the people, who ought to elect the Senators. [Manifestation of applause in the galleries.]

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I had not intended to say anything more upon this subject. I regret, however, so much that what I said annoyed the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS] that I wish to be a little more explicit.

Mr. President, the success of parliamentary and representative government has been complete only among the English-speaking people, and all observers and students of the history of parliamentary and representative institutions admit that one cause of that success has been the fact that both in England and in the United States we have proceeded by party government, by the government that is of two parties, a party of government and a party of opposition; one party in power; the other party always ready to act as the party of criticism and restraint, and in due time itself to take power.

Elsewhere we have had in parliamentary bodies what may be called government by groups. We have seen parliaments, senates, and houses of representatives split up into three or four, or sometimes more, different groups, separated often by small shades of opinion. The coalescence of those groups for a temporary purpose has been necessary to form a ministry or to carry on a government. The result has been an absolutely shifting quality in almost all other parliamentary bodies except our own and those of England. For example, in France, where they have had the system of groups, up to the time of the late ministry of M. Waldeck-Rousseau, there never had been a ministry in France that could hold power over fourteen months. That had been the extreme. All continuity was lost—continuity of foreign policy, continuity of domestic policy. One coalition of groups would come in and put in a ministry. They would fly apart. Another coalition, with slight changes, would bring in another ministry.

There is not any doubt, Mr. President, that the party system has been the great secret of the success of parliamentary institutions in their practical working among English-speaking people. In the Senate the period to which the Senator from Idaho has alluded, when it was in a condition where neither the Republican party nor the Democratic party had power, when we were in that condition in the Senate where everything had to be passed by an arrangement between three groups or two groups and when there was no party responsibility, I say without hesitation was the worst period within the legislative history of the Senate. It was so because there was no party responsibility. It would have been infinitely better to have had either party in absolute control of this body, and I say this as a Republican and a party man. In other words, party responsibility is essential to good government and to a reasonable conservatism. The people intrust government to a party. That party is responsible for the Government in all its parts. No matter what legislation passes here, the party in power is responsible, and properly so, because as an organization it can pass or can stop any law.

Now, Mr. President, you form a majority ad hoc, for one special purpose, in this body or in the House of Representatives, and it has no responsibility to the people. It goes to pieces the moment the single purpose it favors is carried. It does not act together on any other measure even while it is pressing that one, and when it has attained its end it is not responsible to anyone, for, in the very nature of things, it has no responsibility. Irresponsibility is the greatest danger to honest and free government. Responsibility rests, must rest, and ought to rest on the majority party, to which the people have intrusted power for a long or for a short time, as the case may be.

My proposition is that the majority ought to rule. I think the majority party ought to rule because it is responsible. I bowed to the will of the majority party when the Democratic party was in control in this Chamber. I never, to my knowledge, obstructed or filibustered against any of their measures. I think they were rightfully entitled by the vote of the people to control. I think the majority party to-day, because it must bear all the responsibility, because it must have all the glory or all the odium of any measure that passes, no matter whose votes pass it, is entitled to have the authority with the responsibility.

If a majority on this floor ought to rule and rule without restraint and everything ought to bow before it, then the same principle holds good in a party council. The majority there ought to rule and everything ought to bow before it. Mr. President, it is thus very easy to force those doctrines to extremes, and therefore I think it is much wiser to adhere to the beaten paths that the Senate has followed for a hundred years. I have no doubt that all the legislation this country really demands, or that it is safe and wise to pass, will meet with action in this Chamber now and in the future as it has in the past.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON] has talked about the legislative graveyard. Some good measures no doubt lie buried there, but the vast majority are measures which to-day the country is glad to know never passed and which are forgotten in their graves. The delay of the Senate, in view of the rapidity of action elsewhere, has not proved a bad factor in legislation, and I think, Mr. President, that along the old lines of party responsibility and due discussion lies the safest road for legislation in this body.

Mr. MCCOMAS. May I ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BLACKBURN in the chair). Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. MCCOMAS. Does not the very reasoning of the Senator from Massachusetts as to party responsibility lead to a cloture rule, and has it not led the other English-speaking parliamentary government at home and in its principal colonies to adopt a cloture rule, that the responsible party at some time may, after debate, decide?

Mr. LODGE. Never in both Houses, so far as I am aware.

Mr. MCCOMAS. Never in both Houses? Well, we are not the House of Lords.

Mr. LODGE. No; that is perfectly true. But it has never been done in both Houses.

Mr. MCCOMAS. Is it not true that in the principal colonies in both houses they have adopted the cloture rule?

Mr. LODGE. I have not examined the facts enough to say whether it is so in the upper houses of the British colonies or not.

Mr. MCCOMAS. I think the Senator knows that in some cases, at least, it is.

Mr. LODGE. I do not. I never inquired into the practice in the upper houses of those bodies.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has stated his position even more clearly than he did before. In his judgment the majority of the majority should rule. That not only eliminates the political minority, but it eliminates the minority of the majority party.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Idaho allow me to make one observation before the matter passes?

Mr. DUBOIS. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. There is an eminent member of the Canadian parliament on the floor, and I am informed by him there is no cloture rule in the upper house there or in either house.

Mr. DUBOIS. I admit that the majority party at present is thoroughly organized and submits to discipline, but it might be possible that there would be some difference of opinion among the majority about some tariff revision. According to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] the party should take the New England idea in regard to the tariff—the ultra view. The minority in the party ought not to have anything to say about it. The majority ought to have their way.

I am inclined to believe that the Senator from Massachusetts was trying to combat the position of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] and had not seriously taken into consideration the full force and effect of his remarks. I certainly do not believe the Senate of the United States desires to subscribe even by indirection to the proposition that the majority of the majority party, those who would control in a caucus if they went into a caucus, should always have their way in this Chamber.

Mr. BURTON. I wish to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if he thinks we should have a cloture rule in caucus?

Mr. LODGE. I am not in favor of a cloture rule in the caucus, of course. It would be a mere absurdity. All I said was that if you were going to carry the principle of majority rule to extremes, and that the majority must rule always without restraint at all times and immediately in this body, then it is a poor rule which does not work both ways, and the majority ought also to rule in the conference or the caucus just as much as here, if the majority rule is never to be resisted. It can not be right to disregard majority rule in the conference room and hold it a sin to disregard it on the floor of the Senate. I am contending in this case, however, not for the rights of the majority, but for the rights of the minority in this Chamber, and for the system which the Senate has followed for a hundred years.

Mr. CARMACK, Mr. BURTON, and Mr. QUAY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

Mr. CARMACK. I yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. I merely wish to say that I think the Senate is ready for the question. I do not propose to debate the motion which I have made, but I hope the Senate will have an opportunity, in view of this most interesting and illuminating discussion, to take a vote before 2 o'clock to-day on the proposition to refer this whole matter to the Committee on Rules. I beg the Senator's pardon for interrupting him.

Mr. QUAY. Will the Senator from Tennessee pardon me?

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, I wish to suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] that the comparison he has made——

Mr. MALLORY. I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida will state his point of order.

Mr. MALLORY. It is that we can not hear what the Senator from Tennessee says.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order. Senators will please resume their seats.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, I was saying that I want to suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that the comparison he has made with reference to the conditions of party and parliamentary government in other countries—France and England—are not at all applicable to conditions in this country. The life of a ministry in the United States is not dependent upon parliamentary majorities.

The conditions existing in England, where Parliament has become supreme and where the King retains only a shadow of his former power, are not due to the form of the British constitution, but to the accidental fact that there are two and only two political parties, one or the other of which always has a majority in the House of Commons. If that condition were to cease to exist, if there should come to be three or more large political parties in Great Britain, none of which had a majority in the House of Commons, I imagine that the King might resume a great deal of his former power. Conditions here are fixed by the Constitution, and party government in my opinion is of nothing like so much importance in this country as it is in a country where the ministry must be supported all the time by a majority in Parliament or in one House of Parliament. The principle of our Constitution is to keep the legislative and executive power separate and independent. In the working out of parliamentary party government in Great Britain the executive power is wielded in practice and effect by a parliamentary committee.

I do not think, Mr. President, that it is a matter of supreme importance, especially upon a question like this, that the majority of the Senate should be an unmixed and unadulterated partisan majority. This is not necessarily, and it is not in its nature, a party question. Both parties, in fact, have declared in their platforms in favor of the admission of these States. It therefore is not by nature, and has not been made by the two political parties, a party question, and it is a question with reference to which the majority should rule without reference to the political complexion of that majority.

I was about to suggest, when my friend the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS] rose, that I thought it a most remarkable statement which the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] made, in effect that a minority of the Senate, if it happened to be a majority of the majority party, possessed an unlimited right of obstruction, while a minority composed of a minority party had no such right.

Mr. President, I am not in favor of a cloture rule, but I wish to state that in my judgment if a cloture rule is ever adopted in the Senate it will be brought about by just such conditions as prevail now, where debate is carried on not with any view of in, forming the Senate, not with any purpose to change the vote of a single Senator, but purely for the purpose of obstruction and to defeat pending measures by delay. It seems to me if we are to avoid a cloture rule we should have an end of conditions such as have existed here sometimes, where a bill of vast importance to all the people of the United States has been held up by one man at the point of a jawbone and ordered off the statute books in spite of the fact that a large majority of both Houses were in favor of the bill. Such things, Mr. President, are likely to force a cloture rule some time or other, and one reason why I do not like to see debate carried on purely for the purpose of obstruction is that I am afraid it will force the adoption of rules that will unduly limit legitimate debate.

I will not say that there are not occasions when debate for the pure purpose of obstruction may not properly be indulged in, but these must be very exceptional cases, cases like the case of the so-called force bill, where the people in my part of the country believed that if such a bill were enacted into law it would be utterly ruinous and destructive of their whole civilization. It was a case where we were fighting like a man fights in defense of his life and where he casts aside all rules, even that of the commandment, which says, "Thou shalt not kill." It must be an extreme and exceptional case, in my judgment. But if in a case like this, a case where both parties in their platforms have agreed upon and declared in favor of the pending measure, a minority of the Senate are to pursue obstructive tactics and defeat the bill simply by delay, then other Senators in cases of no greater importance will exercise the same right and will put an end to the orderly conduct of business in the Senate and will force the adoption of cloture sooner or later.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I rise to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us have a vote on the resolution.

Mr. HALE. Let us have a vote.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, I wish to be heard upon the pending resolution.

Mr. GALLINGER. So do I.

Mr. QUAY. I prefer that it should go over until to-morrow.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator from Illinois yield to me that I may make a request in connection with the Indian appropriation bill?

Mr. CULLOM. I yield for that purpose.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEWART. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the Indian appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15804) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes, and asking a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. STEWART. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and consent to the conference.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. STEWART, Mr. PLATT of Connecticut, and Mr. JONES of Arkansas were appointed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 16734) to provide an American register for the steamer Beaumont was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After three hours and thirty-five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. COCKRELL. My colleague [Mr. VEST] who is unable to be present at the session of the Senate to-day has asked me to call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 7648) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River and to establish it as a post-road. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. B. F. BARNES, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 17th instant approved and signed the act (S. 475) to refer the claim of Joseph W. Parish to the Secretary of the Treasury for examination and payment of any balance found due.

The message also announced that the President of the United States had on this day approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 6961) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between the city of Chamberlain, in Brule County, and Lyman County, in the State of South Dakota;

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, February 18, 1903.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

SABINE AND NATCHEZ RIVERS, TEXAS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state to the House that in the matter of House bill 17243, which, by order of the House, was referred to the Committee on Rules to see if the RECORD needed to be corrected, that that committee has had the matter under consideration and finds that the RECORD is correct as it stands, and that the action of the House is correct, and that there is no repeal of the river and harbor bill.

HENRY L. M'CALLA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill H. R. 2557, an act for the relief of Henry L. McCalla with Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard upon that motion.

Mr. HULL. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. HAY. A half an hour.

Mr. HULL. This is a Senate amendment to a House bill.

Mr. HAY. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon, I thought it was the conference on the Army bill.

The motion of Mr. HULL was agreed to.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HULL. If it is in order, I wish to call up the conference report on the Army appropriation bill—House bill No. 16567. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY], I understand, wants a little time on his question. How much?

Mr. HAY. I should like to have half an hour.

Mr. HULL. Very well. In the first place, however, I think the statement of the House conferees should be read. I ask for the reading of the statement, omitting the reading of the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] asks unanimous consent that the reading of the report be waived, and that only the statement of the House conferees be read. In the absence of objection that course will be pursued.

There was no objection.

The statement, as published, together with the conference report in the proceedings of yesterday, was read.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, the statement as read shows, I think, in detail the action of the conferees. As I understand, there are in the action of the conference committee only two points on which there is any particular contention. One of these has reference to pay of retired officers; the other, I understand, affects the provision giving to officers of the Army the right to deposit certain amounts of their pay with the Government paymasters. I suppose I am entitled to an hour. I ask the gentleman from Virginia how much time he desires?

Mr. HAY. I should like to have half an hour.

Mr. McCALL. Before the gentleman from Virginia proceeds I wish to ask the gentleman from Iowa what disposition has been made of the item about the Government purchase of the Balls Bluff battlefield for a cemetery?

Mr. HULL. The Senate receded from its amendment.

Mr. McCALL. And the conferees agreed?

Mr. HULL. The conferees agreed.

Mr. McCALL. Then it would not be in order for me to move to restore that item?

Mr. HULL. A conference report can not be amended. It must be voted either up or down as a whole.

Mr. McCALL. I think the provision should have been adopted.

Mr. HULL. I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY].

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I hope that this conference report will be voted down for two reasons. The first reason I wish to urge upon the attention of the House is based on the fact that the officers of the Army, under a provision which was put in the bill by the Senate, are allowed to deposit money upon the same terms as enlisted men, payable at certain periods, under certain regulations, and at such times as the Secretary of War shall prescribe, and bearing interest at 3 per cent per annum. In conference that amendment was changed so as to provide that officers should be permitted to deposit sums of money up to $5,000, at the rate of interest I have just named.

This provision, in my judgment, is against public policy. If such a practice is begun with the officers of the Army, there is no reason why every employee of the Government should not be allowed the privilege of depositing with the Government certain sums of money, the Government paying him 3 per cent interest upon the deposit, this rate of interest being allowed in the face of the fact that the Government can borrow all the money it wants at 2 per cent interest. If after being educated for four years at West Point an Army officer is not able to take care of the money which is paid to him, and if by law we are to permit him to deposit as much as $5,000 with the Government and draw 3 per cent interest thereon, I say that a very dangerous precedent is set. No such provision applies to the officers of the Navy. One argument made in favor of this provision is that Army officers are frequently so far away from banks that they can not deposit their money. I reply that naval officers are stationed all over the world, yet they do not enjoy this privilege, and it is not proposed to confer it. They can not have access to banks as readily as can Army officers. There are banks all over this country, adjacent to almost every post.

There is no reason for this class legislation, this paternalism run mad, which is proposed in this bill. Therefore it does seem to me most undemocratic, most unrepublican, that we should single out a certain class of men and confer upon them favors which we do not allow to other persons in the employment of the Government. So much for that.

Now, as to retired officers, I have no objection to recognizing the officers of the civil war——

Mr. SLAYDEN. I rise to a point of order. The gentleman from Virginia is discussing a very important conference report, and it is impossible to hear him even within 20 feet of him. I should like to have a little order if we can have it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, for the second time this morning, makes the request that gentlemen cease conversation. It is a high right of a member to be heard when addressing this House, and a high right of other members to hear him. The Chair trusts that conversation may cease and not be renewed.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, with regard to the retirement provisions, I have no objection to the recognition of the soldiers who served in the civil war; but I do think that when a provision of that sort is put into this bill it ought to include all of those officers, and not merely a part of them. A careful reading of this amendment will show to the House that while some men and officers who served in the civil war are provided for others are not provided for. For that reason I am opposed to that amendment, and I think that the House ought to refuse to concur in this report, and send it back to conference, in order that these things may be remedied.

I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN].

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, before beginning my remarks I would like to ask a question of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

Mr. HULL. Very well.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I would like to ask the chairman if he can explain to me and to the House how we are to have a separate vote on these amendments which were objected to when the bill was first brought back from the Senate.

Mr. HULL. Well, of course the only way to get a separate vote, as the gentleman from Texas very well knows, is by voting down the conference report. In other words, if the conference report is adopted, it eliminates all the amendments to the bill.

Mr. SLAYDEN. That is my understanding, Mr. Speaker, and I beg the pardon of the gentleman from Iowa for persisting in my inquiry and also for reminding him of the fact that he promised us specifically and plainly that we would have a separate vote upon these amendments.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, that I absolutely deny.

Mr. SLAYDEN. And I would like to know of him now if he will help us vote down the conference report.

Mr. HULL. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that the statement of the gentleman from Texas is not true, and he has no right to make such a statement here.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, the courtesy of the gentleman from Iowa evidently equals his veracity. I will read what the RECORD says on that question:

> The House will undoubtedly have an opportunity to vote on the amendment.

That refers to one of the amendments to which we object.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. When was that?

Mr. SLAYDEN. That was a statement made by the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, Mr. HULL, of Iowa, and printed on page 1894 of the RECORD of February 7.

Mr. HULL. Read on, and the gentleman will see that I said I could not agree to a separate vote.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I will read the colloquy leading up to that.

Mr. HULL. Will the gentleman give us the page.

Mr. SLAYDEN. It is on page 1894, and is as follows:

> Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs to report back from that committee the Senate amendments to House bill 16567, making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904. The committee, by unanimous vote, have directed me to ask unanimous consent that the House disagree with all the amendments of the Senate and ask for a free conference with the Senate.

Further on he says:

> The House will undoubtedly have an opportunity to vote on the amendment.

That, Mr. Speaker, refers to the amendment just discussed by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY], known as the retirement amendment. Further on down the gentleman from Iowa says:

> I want to say to the House, however, that as far as I am concerned, if I shall be a member of the conferees on the part of the House, so far as I can I want to carry out the instructions of the Committee on Military Affairs in its action on these amendments.

Mr. Speaker, he reported that the committee unanimously instructed him to disagree to those amendments. He pledged us an opportunity to vote on those amendments, and he pledged himself, if made a member of that committee of conference, to do what he could to see that we got that opportunity. Mr. Speaker, we have not the opportunity unless the conference report is rejected, and that will not be upon the amendments, as has just been suggested by one of my neighbors. I will say to the gentleman from Iowa in this connection that it is a very cheap form of debate to stand over there and hurl epithets of the character which he did, and only the fact that I am in the bar of this House and desire to preserve the proprieties keeps me from replying in the way that his blackguardism deserves. [Applause on the Democratic side].

Mr. MANN. The gentleman ought to be ashamed of himself.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Now, as to the amendments, there are three or four in there that I believe——

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. The shame is on that side of the House.

Mr. MANN. The shame is over there on that side.

Mr. SLAYDEN. That is a question I am willing to discuss with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] in any manner he pleases elsewhere.

Mr. MANN. I am very much surprised at the gentleman from Texas endeavoring to lecture the gentleman from Iowa and using a far worse expression than the gentleman from Iowa thought of using.

Mr. SLAYDEN. That is a matter of judgment, and the opinion of the gentleman from Illinois on courtesy is not specially valuable that I know of. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. Possibly not of any value to some of the gentlemen on that side of the House.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I insist on being permitted to discuss these amendments which it was my purpose to discuss when I got up here, and not to engage in a personal controversy with any gentleman in this House. In the six years I have served here I have endeavored to treat every member of this House with courtesy, and to yield to this body the courtesy to which its great dignity and great character entitles it. I have tried to refrain at all times from giving way to any expression indicating temper or bad feeling, and I hope, sir, that I may never be found guilty of violating the rules of this House, and only under great provocation have I said what I did say.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as to the merit of these amendments, to which I seriously invite the consideration of this House. There is one which proposes to authorize Army officers to deposit with the Government their savings up to $5,000. It compels the people of this country to pay 3 per cent interest upon these deposits. It compels the Government to borrow when it does not need to borrow. It forces the Government to become a debtor when there is no necessity for it to become a debtor. It compels it to pay a rate of interest 50 per cent above that at which it could go into the markets of the world and borrow the money it might need.

Only a few days ago there was urged before this House with great vehemence and ability a bill which had for its purpose to compel the Government to lend $10,000,000 to the District of Columbia at 2 per cent. Thus we are forced, where the people are concerned, to pay 50 per cent more than the market rate of interest. We would have been compelled, if the majority of this House had taken the views of the minority, to lend $10,000,000 of the people's money to the District of Columbia at 2 per cent. I have discussed that amendment with officers of the Army, and I do not find that any of those gentlemen, except a few staff officers connected with the War Department, believe that there is any merit in the bill or that it is desired by any particularly large number of the officers of the Army. They are not infants. They need no guardians. They average in intelligence with the other people of this country and are just as capable of making their own investments and of caring for themselves as other people.

Now, Mr. Speaker, why should there be invidious distinctions? If the policy of providing a savings bank for any of the employees of this Government is to be adopted, why can we not extend it to the civil as well as to the military employees of the Government? Is the clerk who does his duty in any of these Departments of this Government, or any other officer, not entitled to just as much consideration from the Government as the officers of the Army, who have wages in excess of the average earned by their fellowmen in civil life, and positions that are secure to them for life?

That measure, if understood by this House would, in my judgment, be voted down, because it is unjust to the people of the country and undesirable from the point of view, in my judgment, of a majority of the officers of the Army.

Now, as to the retirement feature, Mr. Speaker, I would have liked to have some information upon that question, but getting epithets where I wanted reasons, I shall refrain from making inquiries. I am told, however, that the proposition will add $150,000 a year, or more, to the expenses of the people of this country. Whether these figures are correct or not, I do not know, but I do not believe that that bill ought to pass in the shape that it is offered to this House. If we are to pass a measure recognizing the services of those men who went into the civil war more than forty years ago, and who have served their country for many years, it certainly ought to be more general in its terms than it is in this amendment.

There is one other amendment, Mr. Speaker, to which I have raised some objection. I refer to the proposition to purchase the manuscript of Mr. Heitman. Mr. Heitman, as I understand it, has been practically all his life an employee of the Government of the United States, drawing a salary, living upon the public, and he has prepared a manuscript, perhaps in his leisure moments, perhaps when not compelled to be rendering service to the Government. On that point I am not advised, but he has prepared a manuscript, and proposes to sell it to the Government for some few thousand dollars. Now, Mr. Speaker, that manuscript is a register of the officers of the Army of the United States. Similar publications have been made by other people. Here are three volumes prepared by General Cullum, a complete register of the cadets of the United States Military Academy and of officers who were graduates, down to the date of its publication.

The time of Mr. SLAYDEN having expired, Mr. HAY yielded to him three minutes more.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Here is another register of the officers of the Army, prepared by Mr. F. B. Heitman. I will ask the gentleman from Virginia if that is the same man?

Mr. HAY. I do not know whether it is the same man or not.

Mr. SLAYDEN. It is prepared by a Mr. F. B. Heitman, possibly the same man, but I do not know. But Mr. Heitman has assured us—I mean the author of the manuscript which it is now proposed to buy out of the public funds—that there is a great demand for his book, and when I was spoken to about it I said:

If that is true, there are publishers in New York and Chicago and Boston and elsewhere who will be glad to take it up and issue it and sell it to the public.

But, Mr. Speaker, that is not the purpose of this amendment. It is to print at the public expense and distribute gratuitously to a few people in this country this compilation of Mr. Heitman's, and I do not believe it ought to be done.

I believe that there are so many objectionable amendments in this bill that the House ought to reject the conference report.

Mr. HAY. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, it is with extreme regret that I differ from my colleagues, the majority of the Committee on Military Affairs, on these particular items of the conference report. My particular objection is to amendment numbered 20, relating to the advancement of certain officers of the Army an additional grade on retiring. I think it is a bad policy, a bad general policy, to advance officers one grade with a view to retirement. It is especially bad policy to make it a matter of legislation. But since Congress has legislated and has placed upon the statute books a provision for advancing naval officers one grade with a view to retirement, it may be but fair to do the same thing for the officers of the Army. But when it is done it ought to be done without any limitations or exceptions. All officers and men in the Army ought to have the same chance. There ought to be one fair rule for all. Now, my objection to this provision in the conference report is that it makes certain exceptions and limitations. It gives certain officers a chance to retire, but men who have done equally meritorious work in the service of their country are not allowed to retire with the same privilege. It makes the provision retroactive, going back to the 11th day of August, 1898.

Mr. FOSS. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Certainly.

Mr. FOSS. Does the provision apply to officers of the civil war or to all of them?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. It applies to officers during the civil war who served one year prior to the 9th day of April, 1865. Now, if a man served one day less than that, it does not apply to him. Take some boy, 18 or 19 years of age, who entered on the 10th day of April, 1864, who served through the battles of the Wilderness and in Virginia, who did as valiant service as any soldier did in the civil war, and yet had served only eleven months and twenty-nine days before that time, he can not retire with one grade higher under the terms of this amendment.

Now, I submit that that is not fair, and it ought not to be sanctioned by an act of this House.

Another vicious provision: it is not fair that this should be made retroactive in the manner that is stated in the amendment, that it should advance some officers who are already on the retired list and not advance others equally as meritorious. Men who have been there three years, four years, and nearly four years and a half could be advanced one grade under the provisions of this amendment, and others who may be more meritorious are excluded by reason of some exceptions or limitations. I submit that is not good legislation, that that should not be encouraged by a vote of this House. I submit for that reason alone this report, with a disagreement as to this item, should be sent back into conference.

There is another amendment, numbered 3, providing for the purchase of the manuscript of a register of the United States Army. This House realizes what that is. Here is an employee of one of the departments of our Government who compiles an official register, so called, of the officers of the Army of the United States. He sells his manuscript by the provisions of this act. He goes to the various officers to whom it would be useful, who like to have their records appear in print. It is a useful compendium. I have no doubt these men would like to have it; but if they like to have it they ought to pay for it themselves. I submit it is bad policy for Congress to allow officers or employees of the various departments to do work connected with the departments, it may be, a little outside of their official duties, and then compel and create a demand for their work and come to Congress and get appropriations to purchase it.

Mr. HAMILTON. What is the scope of this work?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. It includes all the officers in the Army from the beginning.

Mr. HULL. Including the volunteers.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. It gives a list of all the officers of the Army from the beginning of the Government.

Now, there has been brought to my attention an illustration of that, showing its evil. In one of the other departments of the Government—not the War Department—some employees did certain work that greatly facilitated the process of work of that department. It may have been done outside of official hours; of that I do not know. It may have been done with material not paid for by the Government; of that I do not know. But I do know a bill was presented to this House and referred to one of the committees of this House to purchase that work, to purchase the patent for that process, carrying an appropriation of $50,000. Now, if we vote in this House upon such a provision as that, we encourage the employees of this Government to originate schemes, to create a demand for it, and then come to Congress and get pay by lobbying, or things of that sort. For that reason that amendment should be disagreed to. So that I trust, Mr. Speaker, that on account of these two amendments alone that this report shall be disagreed to. [Applause.]

Mr. HULL. How much time has the gentleman from Virginia remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has six minutes.

Mr. HULL. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. CAPRON].

Mr. CAPRON. Mr. Speaker, I do not think I will need more than a small portion of the five minutes yielded to me, because I think I shall be able to convince the fair-minded members in this House in much less time that the captious attacks upon the conferees are unwarranted and unfounded. Take them as my friend from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS] has left them, and I would like to address myself for one minute to the publication for which an appropriation was placed by the Senate in the bill. There is a man of many years' service in the War Department, Heitman by name, who, in his own time, took the Government records from the beginning of the Army to to-day, and for twenty years has compiled the only reliable roster of the United States Army in existence.

The War Department, the Adjutant-General's Office, the office of General Ainsworth say that this is the only reliable record to which they can now refer. The number of copies, contrary to what my friend from Texas has alleged, that will be required are few, so that the book never could be sold by popular subscription. It is an invaluable work, the result of many years' application of careful service on the part of this compiler. Three thousand dollars is all that is asked to be appropriated to transfer this work to the Government aside from its publication.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. That does not include the cost of printing and distribution?

Mr. CAPRON. Oh, no; it includes the labor of this man for twenty years on this valuable work. I would encourage men to do outside valuable work for the Government.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. And then sell it to the Government.

Mr. CAPRON. I would encourage men to invent smokeless powder, as one man has perfected that invention for the great good of the country, and over which a controversy arose, some objecting that the man ought not to have anything for his discovery, which was worth millions to the Government. Our whole patent system encourages men along just such lines. I do not believe in having men simply automatons in the service of the Government, as you would force them to be by this method.

This work is the man's own work. We are using it now. He has taken twenty years to perfect it. It is worth the money, and that is the reason, for one, why I am willing to concur in the Senate amendment.

In regard to the retirement clause, I am not one of those wedded to a retirement clause of this or any other kind, but the Navy of the United States has now, and has had for four years, a retirement clause much more broad than this one that has been reported in the Senate amendment, and which the conferees have agreed to with an amendment. This provision is very greatly restricted, very much below, and taking in very many less than is now the case with the Navy. Now, we believe that the Army service as compared with the Navy is just as deserving; and while we can not get the enactment in regard to the Navy repealed, I think we should put the two arms of the service on equal ground. In this respect it is no more than fair, and we ought to be willing to do it; although if, in the judgment of the House it is not deemed wise, I would not urge it beyond what seems right and just in the mind of Congress, to put the two arms of the service on an equal basis.

Mr. BOWIE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CAPRON. Certainly.

Mr. BOWIE. Is it any argument in favor of the proposition that is not meritorious that some other nonmeritorious proposition is enacted into law?

Mr. CAPRON. The gentleman means that two wrongs never make a right?

Mr. BOWIE. That is the proposition.

Mr. CAPRON. I do not suppose they do, but there has been no wrong. There has been an opportunity given to advance the naval officers one grade on retirement. Now, that will never be taken back, because many men have received it and you can never repeal it. I hope the House will agree to the report of the conferees.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Rhode Island has expired.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has twenty-three minutes remaining.

Mr. LACEY. I would like to ask the gentleman a question before he yields the floor.

Mr. HULL. Very well.

Mr. LACEY. There are some bills pending in the Military Committee on behalf of eminent and distinguished Army officers, authorizing the President to appoint them by promotion for retirement, who were retired prior to 1898, men of the highest distinction, men of the longest service. Now, the effect of this proposition will be to bar that class of men in favor of younger members who have seen similar service, and not much of it. Does not the gentleman think the date ought to be changed so as to cover this class of men who have already appealed to the committee for relief?

Mr. HULL. I would like to touch on that point, when I come to close the debate, if I can. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, in the five minutes' time I can only refer to one or two matters that my attention has been directed to. This appropriation for barracks and quarters makes $2,000,000 immediately available, and $250,000 in addition immediately available in the Philippines, and some other immediately available provisions. In other words, between two and three million dollars—nearer three millions than two millions—are made immediately available. This is an appropriation bill for the coming year and a deficiency bill for this year. How much more may be in this bill, how much more in other bills, I do not know; but I do know that this practice of going from committee to committee where a committee under the rules of the House has jurisdiction, and then, before the matter has been investigated, by the aid of a willing Senate, failing in one place, rushing to another that has not jurisdiction, and sticking in amendments here and there and yonder ought to be done away with. Appropriation for the next year, appropriation for this year, legislation here, legislation there. If action is continued along these lines it will demoralize the matter of appropriation and bring scandal and criticism—deserved criticism—from the people of the country.

Now, touching this retirement matter, I do not know whether it is right or not. I want to treat the Army liberally. This provision had no place in the House bill; it is legislation pure and simple, on a large scale, by Senate amendment. How does it come here? In a conference agreement, by the grace of the Senate—wholesale. I should be glad if every member here who thinks he understands this provision would stand up. These matters ought to be treated of upon their merits. If I vote for this conference report on this great bill to supply the public service, I am compelled to vote for a bill that supplies that service for the next year as well as for this year, a bill that amends the law and introduces a new policy touching the retired list. It may be justifiable; I do not know. I have got to take it upon trust. In this body, close to the people, we proceed under rules. In another body—and I think I can say it within parliamentary lines—legislation is by unanimous consent. And when I say that, gentlemen understand what it means. [Applause.]

Mr. HULL. I hope the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] will now conclude his remarks.

Mr. HAY. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I regret that a sense of public duty will compel me, when the time arrives, to vote against the conference report. There are at least three provisions in this report to which I am opposed. I am opposed in toto to the retirement clause of the bill. I have heard no argument for it except that it is somewhat in the line of a provision made some time ago for the Navy, although the conditions in the two branches of the service were and are not similar, and therefore, even if the provision made with regard to the Navy were wise, it would not necessarily follow that this provision is. I doubt the wisdom of that action as regards the Navy, and I think that the error then made should not be perpetuated and extended.

Further, the provision contained in the bill as regards retirement is unfair and unjust. If we are to advance generally the grade of officers who served in the civil war, then we should include everyone who honorably served in that war, including those who, by reason of wounds or disabilities incurred in the service of their country, were compelled to leave that service before the beginning of the Spanish war. From time to time Congress has advanced the grade of officers for peculiarly gallant and meritorious services. From time to time the President has advanced men just before retirement on account of particularly meritorious services. But, sir, we discredit the action of the Executive, we cheapen our own action, when we say that by one piece of "blanket" legislation of this kind we will raise every man on the list to a level with those who were thus, we must suppose, properly, peculiarly honored. Why have we in the past especially honored men for special services if now we say that we will nullify all that action and raise the entire list one grade?

We have been liberal to the Army. We should have been liberal to it. But I do not believe that justice or even generosity commends this action. On the contrary, justice condemns it as unfair in that it does not extend even-handed generosity.

I am opposed to the provision in the bill for the acceptance by the Government of funds from officers of the Army and the payment of 3 per cent interest on the same. I do not believe that such legislation is necessary or particularly desired by the officers of the Army. I do not believe it is in accord with good public policy.

I am opposed to the purchase and distribution at public expense of an Army roster—valuable, I admit, but which the people at large do not desire and will never use—a roster which is only required by certain departments of the Government and will be sought for by only a comparatively few people.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HAY. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON].

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the House is put at a very great disadvantage when we come to vote upon a conference report if we are not satisfied in the House with amendments that have been put upon the bill by the Senate. It seems that in this case the Senate put on this bill certain amendments which are obnoxious to our rules. As has been stated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], the legislative provisions that they have put upon this bill would have no standing under our rules if proposed here. Now, when that has been done and the bill comes back to us from the Senate, we ought to have the right to vote as an independent proposition upon every such proposition presented to us, and should not be required to vote upon various propositions as a whole in a conference report.

Now, we have not that permission, we have not that privilege. And why? Because I undertake to say of the statement of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL], whether he meant to do it or not, he has misled the House of Representatives. I do not believe the gentleman from Iowa would intentionally mislead the House, but that is the effect of the action that we are now taking. And why do I say it? Because when this bill came from the Senate with Senate amendments the gentleman from Iowa, the chairman of the Military Committee, as it was his duty to do, asked of the House unanimous consent to nonconcur in the Senate amendments. He could not have nonconcurred and sent the bill to conference without unanimous consent of this House, and he was held up, as we all know, on that request upon a promise, almost expressed, certainly implied, that we should have the right to vote upon the Senate amendments. We are denied that right unless we vote down the conference report.

Now, I appeal to the members on both sides, in the interests of perfect good faith, that we vote down this conference report in order that we may have a separate vote upon these obnoxious Senate propositions. Now, will you join with us? The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has indicated his opposition. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] has indicated his opposition. We appeal to you to help us vote this down. Why do I say we were misled? When the gentleman asked unanimous consent to nonconcur in the Senate amendments and put the bill in conference, he was at a disadvantage, and was held up. He was compelled to have unanimous consent. Some of the gentlemen on this side of the House said that we ought to have the right, if we consented and waived our rights, to have a separate vote, which we could get by sending it to the Military Committee. If we waived those rights, then we ought to have a right to vote upon these amendments. Now, a part of the colloquy between the gentleman from Iowa and some on this side was read by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN]. Here is what occurred:

Mr. BARTLETT. Perhaps I did not make myself plain. I intended to ask whether or not the House would have an opportunity to vote upon the amendment without voting up or down the entire conference report.

That was the question. We were asking for an assurance that we should have a separate vote without being required to vote up or down the entire conference report. I continue with what the RECORD shows:

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, as I said, it is impossible for any one member of the conference committee to pledge what it is going to do, but the report will go into the RECORD and be printed, and the chances are that there will be no agreement. The Senate may recede or the conferees may report amendments. The House always has it in its power to pass on the question, but the sooner it goes into conference the more time the House will have to consider these questions.

Mr. BARTLETT. Of course, we understand the regular routine way of passing conference reports and the power that the majority has over amendments. But frequently in the House the statement has been made that the House would not be deprived from voting upon a particular amendment of the Senate. I ask the gentleman if there is any probability that we may have the conference report come in and vote on that particular amendment?

Mr. HULL. The gentleman from Georgia realizes that this same provision is on a bill already in conference.

Mr. BARTLETT. I do.

Mr. HULL. I want to say to the House, however, that as far as I am concerned, if I shall be a member of the conferees on the part of the House, so far as I can I want to carry out the instructions of the Committee on Military Affairs in its action on these amendments.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I say there is an implied promise to give a separate vote on the objectionable Senate amendments, and it was made by the gentleman because he was seeking to get the bill in conference. He was being told by gentlemen on this side that he could not do that by unanimous consent unless we were to have a separate vote on this amendment. I think the gentleman meant to convey the idea that if we gave our consent that we should have a separate vote—that is, that the House should have a separate vote on the Senate amendments if it were desired. We can not have it under this conference report, and all I have risen to say is that we ought to have that right; that the majority of the House, men on both sides, who do not agree to these Senate amendments ought to come forward and vote down the conference report and then instruct our conferees.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON], I want to say to the House that every member knows that that is never the case where it is held that the conferee can not agree to legislation placed on a bill by the Senate, even if it is contrary to the rules of the House; and I will venture the assertion that there is hardly a conference report adopted by the House where such action was not taken by the conferees. So that contention should not have any weight. The gentleman has recited what I intended to read in answer to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN], where I stated that it was impossible to say what we would do; that on these amendments there either could be a disagreement or the Senate might recede, or they might agree to amendments to their amendments, by which we could bring it before the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Now, I ask the gentleman if the conferees did any one of those things?

Mr. HULL. Yes; all of them.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. On the other hand, you have accepted the Senate amendments.

Mr. HULL. No, we have not, sir; not in a single case. The Committee on Military Affairs considered these amendments; the amendments that are opposed by the gentleman from Minnesota and the gentleman from Wyoming and the gentleman from Texas, and every one of them, except this in regard to retirement, was passed upon by the committee, and we were instructed to make certain amendments and agree to them as amended—every one of them. The conferees carried out the instructions of the Committee on Military Affairs in every case, unless it is, possibly, this one in regard to retirement.

On that matter the Senate changed its amendment radically. The Senate amendment provided for practically extending the advanced grade to all on the retired list as well as to all on the active list, who had civil war services, without any regard to whether that civil war service was one day or more. If they were commissioned in the Army before the 9th day of April, 1865, they had one grade advance when they came to retire, or if they had been on the retired list for thirty years and engaged in private business, going on with their daily work like the rest of us, under the Senate provision if they could show that they were retired for disease, even if they had entirely recovered, they got one grade in advance. We limited it so as practically to comply with the act affecting the Navy. Under the personnel bill every man on the active list of the Navy who had civil war service, whether one day or more, received on retirement an additional grade. I will ask the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs if that is not true.

Mr. FOSS. I want to say right there that when that provision was adopted for the Navy it was done for a particular purpose. We found that men were reaching command rank very late in life, and we wanted to provide a flow of promotion so that the younger men could come to command rank before reaching advanced age.

Mr. HULL. I hope this does not come out of my time. I am willing to concede all of that, but it applied to everyone in the Navy who had civil war service. It even made one man a rear-admiral who had fifteen days' service. This requires one year's service in the civil war.

Now, gentlemen of the House, one of the conferees on the part of the Senate was a man who served on the Confederate side during the entire war. He rose by his own efforts as a gallant soldier from the rank of captain to that of a brigadier-general of the line. When this question was up and the House conferees were insisting on having a separate vote, this distinguished Confederate said, substantially, that he wanted to recognize the men who served in the civil war as we had already recognized the Navy, and with the limitation of one year he believed the House would adopt it. The limitation of a year was put in. It advances no man who did not serve a year in that greatest war of the ages; and it did seem to me that when a man who for four years had fought under a different flag, who had acknowledged allegiance to our flag as the result of that war, who has been one of the best citizens of the Republic from that day to this, a man who has at heart the best interests of the country as much as any man in either House of Congress, urged upon us that we recognize these old soldiers in this way, that I, at least, could come before the House and favor the proposition.

Mr. HAY. I want to say that I will not make the point of order that the gentleman is stating what passed in conference, but I will state that the Senator to whom the gentleman referred did not urge this measure with as great insistence as the gentleman would have the House believe.

Mr. HULL. I probably ought not to have stated what he said but I felt in justice to the rest of us that I could say what I have said.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have no pride of opinion in regard to this matter. I would have preferred as one of the conferees to have brought it back and have the House pass upon it as an independent measure; but after the Congress has done what it has done for the Navy, after these soldiers have spent their time from the civil war down, out on the plains enduring hardships, protecting settlers, always in active service, it seems to me that it is merely an act of grace for the Congress of the United States to say to them, "We will do as well by you as we have by the kindred arm of the service."

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman if he does not think that the law ought to apply to officers who have been retired on account of wounds received in battle or who have been compulsorily retired on account of age—all of them?

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say to the committee that that would extend it to so great an extent it would virtually take in the entire list. I merely say that which every man knows when I say that a man who went into the Army thirty or more years ago and afterwards left it and went into business, and the Government has given him three-fourths of his service pay on retirement, in most cases he is much better off than if he had remained in the Army to the present time. So far as concerns the privilege of officers making deposits is concerned, very few officers will take advantage of the provision. The Secretary of War, the Adjutant-General, and other officers in touch with the Army thought that it was something that should be done.

It is true that only a few may take advantage of it, because the rate is only 3 per cent, and the amount that they can deposit is limited. We do a little more for the men than we do for these officers. We give the enlisted man 4 per cent, and allow him to deposit all the money he wants to. He is not limited to his pay as an enlisted man. We compel officers to incur expense. We compel them to buy uniforms of a certain character. I want to say that there is not an officer below the grade of captain in the Army, who has not private means outside of his pay, who is not compelled to go in debt to comply with the orders of his superiors in supplying himself with a new uniform. Take a second lieutenant who gets $1,400 a year. He spends $600 of it for a new uniform, and the result is that he is in debt for three or four years. If he is at a frontier post, he does not have the advantage of a savings bank where he could deposit his savings. But if he can save $20 a month of his pay, and put it with the paymaster, why it would be of real benefit to him and no hurt to the Government. It will, however, be used if it is retained in the man's possession; but where he can deposit it and it is placed beyond his reach it will be saved.

That is true of a member of Congress, and I assume it is true of an officer of the Army. Every man whose bank is his pocket is not liable to make much of a saving. It encourages these men to make a saving. The amount is limited to $5,000. When he reaches that it is impossible for him to deposit any more with the Government. It can not do any harm. It was put in there at the request and solicitation of the Secretary of War. He has no interest in the matter other than the best interests of the Army. Now, I acknowledge some of the criticisms made by my friend from Illinois about this immediately available proposition. I think, if I am not mistaken, that the sundry civil bill has legislation of that kind. I will ask the gentleman if such a provision was inserted in the sundry civil bill. Am I correct about that?

Mr. CANNON. If my friend will allow me, the Committee on Appropriations has jurisdiction of the sundry civil and deficiency, and there is no trouble of keeping track; but here are six other appropriation committees, and all of them have jurisdiction, too, and it is impossible to keep track of them.

Mr. HULL. The gentleman has control of the deficiencies.

Mr. CANNON. And the sundry civil bill.

Mr. HULL. All deficiencies go to his committee.

Mr. CANNON. And the sundry civil also.

Mr. HULL. And the sundry civil also. But that bill carries appropriations that belong to all these, so that if there is any deficiency, if a deficiency in the sundry civil bill, that would have to be put on the deficiency bill.

Mr. CANNON. No.

Mr. HULL. And the rest of us would have to keep track of them. The gentleman can of course put the rest of us to looking at the sundry civil bill for deficiencies under the sundry civil in the regular ordinary consideration. But deficiencies should be carried in proper bills so all may know.

Mr. CANNON. Well, it is a plausible rather than a real criticism to attempt to criticise when the only argument you can plead is to plead that two wrongs would make a right.

Mr. HULL. Oh, no; the point of order was made against it.

Mr. CANNON. It went out on a point of order.

Mr. HULL. Now, Mr. Speaker, I can very readily see where members of the House do not like the retirement clause, because it does not go as far as they would like to have it go. And in reply to the question asked me by the gentleman from Iowa a short time ago, I want to say, in reference to the case of the distinguished officer that he refers to, in place of this legislation blocking it he is in certainly as good a shape after this passes as he was before. In other words, the whole question is an act of grace on the part of Congress. There is not a single officer of the Army, I think, that ever had the right to come to Congress and ask an advanced grade. It is an act of grace, and that only. It becomes an act of a little more than that in the Army, in view of what Congress has done for the Navy in giving them their advanced grade. And each man would come to Congress, as the friend of my friend from Minnesota and my friend and my colleague from Iowa—they will come to Congress on their own merits. That is what they have to do if this is voted down.

We have limited this to the lowest point we could, and put the two arms of the service on as near an equality as we could in this matter, with the exception that we believe, in a matter of this kind, that we should give it to those that served in the civil war and not simply to those who had a commission just before the close of the war.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. HULL. I would like to say just one word more. The President has appointed 34 colonels to be brigadier-generals, and this measure, if adopted, will apply to those below the grade of brigadier more than to the higher grades.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HULL) there were—ayes 33, noes 69.

So the motion to agree to the conference report was lost.

Mr. HULL. Now, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Virginia desires to have a separate vote, if he desires to move to concur, I do not want to cut him off.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DALZELL). Gentlemen will state on what amendments they want separate votes.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I desire a separate vote on the amendment numbered 23, and on amendment numbered 20 and amendment numbered 3.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I call for the reading of the amendments.

Mr. RIXEY. I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa a question, Mr. Speaker. Will he not consent to pass that amendment for a few minutes and take up another?

Mr. HULL. I imagine that there is no controversy, Mr. Speaker, as to the retirement clause. The vote of the House is, in my judgment, overwhelmingly opposed to the proposition for retirement, and there is only one thing to be done, and that is absolutely to let the Senate recede or consider the bill as dead. I do not presume the House will ever reverse its decision on that proposition. I do not know of anyone that wants a vote on any other amendment.

Mr. HAY. I have already indicated, Mr. Speaker, that we want a separate vote on amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia has indicated that he wants a separate vote on amendments numbered 3, 20, and 23. If that be all, the Chair will put the question.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I have not been able to run these amendments over and keep them in my mind. I will ask the gentleman from Virginia what those amendments are.

Mr. HAY. No. 3 refers to the purchase from Francis D. Heitman of a Historical Register of the United States Army. No. 23 refers to the authorizing and permitting officers to make deposits. Amendment No. 20 refers to the retirement of officers to a higher grade.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that these amendments, before they are voted upon, may be reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. They will be reported. If there are no other amendments upon which a separate vote is desired, the question is, Shall the House further insist on its disagreement to all the amendments except Nos. 3, 20, and 23?

Mr. RIXEY. What is the number of the Balls Bluff amendment?

Mr. HULL. No. 43.

Mr. RIXEY. I want that reserved.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendments, except those reserved, numbered 3, 20, 23, and 43, that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendments.

The question was taken; and the House insisted on its disagreement to the Senate amendments except those upon which a separate vote was demanded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report amendment No. 3.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of War to purchase from Francis B. Heitman, the compiler thereof, the manuscript of the Historical Register of the United States Army, compiled from the official records of the War Department from 1789 to the date of the passage of this act, $3,000, to be immediately available; and for printing an edition of 6,000 copies of said register by the Public Printer, 1,000 for the use of the Senate, 2,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 3,000 for the War Department, and from the copies allotted to the War Department each Government depository shall be supplied with one copy, $12,000.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I suppose a motion to disagree would not take the sense of the House upon this amendment as much as a motion to concur, and in order to test the sense of the House as to whether this provision shall be retained, I move that the House concur in this amendment.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, is that motion debatable?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Certainly.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I do not care to detain the House but a few minutes. I simply want to say that this man Heitman has been something over thirty years compiling these records, and every officer of the War Department has urged upon Congress the necessity of purchasing these records. I think the correspondence of a good many members will show that a large number of patriotic societies throughout the country, especially the Cincinnati, have urged that we adopt this so that they can have in the libraries a complete record of all the officers of the United States from the foundation of the Government to the present time. I want to say further, that the Secretary of War and the Adjutant-General and other bureau chiefs have reported to the Committee on Military Affairs that they have to use this manuscript frequently in answering their correspondents in regard to the officers, especially in the Regular Army. The Pension Office has a good record of the volunteer officers of the civil war, so that it is not so necessary in regard to the officers of that war.

But with reference to the Regular Army and the wars prior to the civil war they use it almost constantly; and it was represented to us that the expenditure of this small sum of money will save the time of clerks, while the expense would be multiplied many times if the Government should require the work to be done. It is proposed to pay $3,000 for this manuscript. I have no interest in this book. I do not know that I should ever want to use it. But in answer to the suggestion of the gentleman from Texas a few moments ago, that all this information has been published, I want to say that the Committee on Military Affairs secured one volume of what was supposed to be the best work of this kind already published, but they found it so full of inaccuracies as to be utterly worthless, although for one volume the cost was $10. There is not enough general demand for this work to justify its publication unless it is published by order of Congress.

If members of the House believe that this small sum will be properly expended in giving these valuable records not only to a department of the Government that has special use for them, but also to give to the public libraries of the several States a complete record of the armies of the United States from the Revolutionary period to the present time, then they ought to vote in favor of concurring in the amendment. On the other hand, if this work is not regarded as valuable, they ought to vote against the motion to concur.

Mr. CANNON. How many volumes will there be of this work?

Mr. HULL. Six thousand copies.

Mr. CANNON. How many volumes—3, 5, or 10?

Mr. HULL. I do not know how many volumes there will be. That question we did not go into, but we sent the manuscript to the Public Printer for his estimate, and we found it would cost $12,000 to print 6,000 copies of this work. There would be two volumes at least.

Mr. CANNON. I should think there would be a dozen, but I do not know.

Mr. HULL. I repeat, we did not go into the question of how many volumes. We wanted to ascertain the cost, and we got his estimate; 6,000 copies—1,000 for the use of the Senate, 2,000 for the use of the House, and the others for the Department of War—would cost $12,000 for printing. Adding to this the cost of purchasing the manuscript, the total expenditure would be $15,000.

It seems to me this is the only way in which we can make available this mass of information, which would certainly be valuable to public libraries and as a book of reference.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I should like to know how much time other gentlemen desire.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield to me five minutes?

Mr. HULL. Yes, sir. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS].

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I have no personal interest in this matter at all. I oppose this provision because it seems to be bad legislative policy. It strikes me as a bad thing for us to encourage employees in the departments to take some of the time that belongs to the Government, for which the people pay, and to take the strength that belongs to the Government, for which the people pay, and devote this time and strength to their own private business, and, when they have accomplished something, lobby with the officers of the Department and then lobby with their friends in Congress to get some Senate amendment attached to an appropriation bill, and then come here to get an appropriation to pay for something for which the people have already paid.

Now, I know it is claimed that this work was done outside of office hours. That may or may not be true; I do not know.

Mr. HULL. Is not that the statement of the War Department—that this work was done entirely outside of office hours?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Conceding that to be true, yet the evil of the thing remains, for this man would naturally devote more of his time, more of his strength, more of his intelligence to doing work that would advance his own private fortune than to work for that which the people pay him. If we encourage this kind of thing by voting to concur in this amendment, we shall be flooded with similar schemes from other departments.

If this work is needed, let the War Department do it in the regular way. Let the Department come before the appropriate committee of this House; let it make an estimate for the purpose of accomplishing this work. Let it be done under the direction, if that be thought best, of this man. Let it pay him for doing this work inside of office hours. Let us not establish now an evil precedent by encouraging men to take their time and their strength in doing work which does not belong to their regular duties, and then encourage them in lobbying with their friends to have an amendment like this placed on an appropriation bill. It seems to me that is the precedent that is now to be set.

I do not know anything about the merits of this particular work; but if the various societies throughout the country, if the various officers throughout the country, if the War Department or any of the various bureaus of that Department want this work done, let us see that it is provided for in the regular way. [Applause.]

Mr. SLAYDEN rose.

Mr. HULL. How much time does the gentleman from Texas desire?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, how is the time controlled?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. By the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL]. He has the floor.

Mr. HULL. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I was under the impression that, in view of the peculiar parliamentary status, I, as a member of the committee or as a member of the House, should have the right to certain time—that I should have recognition.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] lost control of the time by being defeated on his motion.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I do not need to say a word on that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point made by the gentleman from New York comes too late. The gentleman from Iowa was recognized by the Chair and has an hour. At the end of that time the Chair will recognize any other gentleman in his own right.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I merely wanted to know the parliamentary situation.

Mr. HULL. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Oh, two or three minutes.

Mr. HULL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman and will yield more, if he wants it.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS] has so clearly and so amply discussed the amendment now under consideration that I would not say a word were it not that I know it is a physical impossibility for gentlemen sitting on this side of the House to have heard all that he said. This amendment is to pay a clerk in the War Department $5,000 for a compilation of the names of officers of the United States Army. There is no demand for that publication among the people and taxpayers of this country, that I know of. A demand has been created by very skillful lobbying in certain official circles, and the purpose of the amendment is to appropriate $12,000 of the people's money out of the public Treasury and to print a book, to be given away to a few gentlemen who would probably be able to buy it if it were printed by an ordinary publisher in the ordinary way of business. When it was first brought to my attention, I think by the officer himself, it was stated that there was a large and general demand for the book. I said to him that if that were true he was fortunate in being the possessor of such a manuscript, and that all he would have to do would be to take it to a publisher, get it printed and sell it and meet that large demand. He evidently did not believe that the large demand existed, because the price asked by the author has very materially fallen since then, and now it is proposed to take the entire sum out of the public Treasury.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, if there is no other gentleman who desires to speak on the matter, I ask for a vote on the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa, that the House recede from its disagreement to amendment No. 3 of the Senate and concur in the same.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. STEELE. Let us have a division.

Mr. HULL. I do not care for a division.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 30, noes 71.

So the motion was lost.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I move to nonconcur in amendment No. 20.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman moves to further insist on our disagreement?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia moves that the House further insist on its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 3.

Mr. HAY. No, Mr. Speaker, we have just passed on No. 3.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair begs the gentleman's pardon. What is the gentleman's motion?

Mr. HAY. I move to nonconcur in Senate amendment No. 20.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House must first dispose of No. 3. The House has refused to recede and concur so far as No. 3 is concerned. Now, then, the proper motion, if the Chair might be allowed to suggest it, would be that the House further insist on its disagreement to amendment No. 3.

Mr. HAY. Very well, Mr. Speaker, I make that motion to further insist.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I do not know that I quite caught what the Speaker said. The House, having voted not to concur in the Senate amendment No. 3, is now in a position where a motion to further insist upon its disagreement is necessary, do I understand?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is the judgment of the Chair.

Mr. BARTLETT. And that motion has been made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will have the Clerk read from Jefferson's Manual.

The Clerk read as follows:

Third. To recede. You may then either insist or adhere.
Fourth. To insist. You may then either recede or adhere.
Fifth. To adhere. You may then either recede or insist.
Consequently the negative of these is not equivalent to a positive vote the other way. It does not raise so necessary an implication as may authorize the Secretary by inference to enter another vote; for two alternatives still remain, either of which may be adopted by the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia, that the House further insist on its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 3.

The question was taken, and the motion agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, the House understands what the amendment is, and I ask unanimous consent that the reading of it be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The amendment is as follows:

And any officer of the Army now on the active list below the grade of major-general who served with credit as an officer or an enlisted man in the regular or volunteer service during the civil war before April 15, 1865, may when retired be retired by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, with the rank and retired pay of the next higher grade. This section shall apply to officers who have been retired on or since the 11th day of August, 1898, and all those now on the retired list, without regard to length of service, who served with credit as officers or as enlisted men in the regular or volunteer forces during the civil war prior to April 15, 1865, otherwise than as a cadet, and whose names are borne on the Official Register of the Army, and who have heretofore been retired on account of wounds received or disability incurred in the line of duty, or on account of age, or who have received the Congressional medal of honor, but shall not apply to any officer who has been placed on the retired list by virtue of any special act of Congress, nor to any officer who has already received an advance of grade at the time of retirement, or with a view to retirement: Provided, That in conferring the promotions authorized by this act the grades of first and second lieutenants shall be held to be one and the same grade.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House nonconcur.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia moves that the House further insist on its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20, and the gentleman is recognized.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I do not care to be heard.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question, then, is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment 23: On page 18, line 24, after the word "deposits" insert: "Provided, That officers of the Army shall have the right to deposit money upon the same terms as enlisted men, payable at such periods and under such regulations and at such times as the Secretary of War shall prescribe, and bearing interest at 3 per cent per annum."

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist upon its disagreement to that amendment.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, before the vote is taken, I wish to suggest that the Clerk has not read it as it was fixed up in conference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not understand the gentleman.

Mr. HULL. The Clerk has not read it as fixed in conference. He has read it as originally amended by the Senate. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the amendment as amended. The clerk in the enrolling room has the amendment as it will go into the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa must recollect that the conference report is disagreed to.

Mr. HULL. I understand that, and I beg the pardon of the Chair, because my motion is not in order.

Mr. HAY. I can not hear a word the gentleman is saying.

Mr. HULL. I say as the amendment is reported here none of us is in favor of it, so that I think we are all in favor of insisting on the disagreement to this.

Mr. HAY. I want it understood that my motion is to further insist upon the disagreement of the House to the amendment, as it was amended in conference.

Mr. HULL. Further insist on the disagreement of the House.

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, do I understand the gentleman from Virginia to say that he is in favor of the amendment as made in conference on this particular item?

Mr. HAY. No; I am not.

Mr. PARKER. I should like to see if that can be decided here, because, as the proposition has been amended in conference, it seems to be really for the advantage of the Army, and I should like to say a word on that subject, if the gentleman will allow me now.

Mr. HAY. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. PARKER. Only two or three minutes.

Mr. HAY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER].

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, the Senate amendment as originally adopted gave power to any officer to leave or deposit money with the Government, the Government to act as a savings bank. The amendment as agreed to in conference only gave power to the officer to leave part of his pay with the Government by way of savings and to receive thereon the small interest of 3 per cent, the total amount to be so deposited by any one officer not to exceed $5,000.

The special form of this may be varied, but as to the substance of it the Secretary of War, the Adjutant-General, and other officers tell us that the young officers getting less than $200 a month out at frontier posts have no place to deposit their money, and they will spend it all if it is paid into their hands.

Of course we all agree that they ought to be saving toward the day when their expenses will be greater, toward the expense of getting new uniforms when they are promoted, and that the saving of their pay tends to discipline and good order and to promote the character of the officers of a post. If so, they should be encouraged to save some of their pay and should be afforded the opportunity which they have in the East, but which they can not have at some frontier posts. That being so, the purpose of the Senate amendment is right. It would not be right to allow any officer who happens to be rich to deposit his thousands of dollars. It is right to allow small savings to be made by officers as well as by enlisted men. It is not only right, but it is for the good of the Army.

Now, how this matter is to be brought about I do not know. We shall have to vote with the gentleman from Virginia in favor of disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate as it stands, but I think his motion is susceptible to an amendment that we disagree to this Senate amendment unless so amended as to limit the deposits to pay and to provide a reasonable maximum for the amount which may be so deposited. I move this as an amendment to the motion of the gentleman from Virginia.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia has moved to disagree to Senate amendment No. 23.

Mr. HAY. There seems to be some trouble about the parliamentary situation; that is, that the Senate and House conferees agreed to the amendment of the Senate with an amendment proposed by the House conferees. The amendment proposed by the House conferees is not now before the House. In order to get at this I move the following, that the House instruct its conferees not to agree to any proposition as to deposits of funds by Army officers on interest.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion is not in order at this time. The Chair will state the parliamentary situation. The amendment that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] would like to concur in was an amendment that was embodied in the conference report, but of course by the action of the House that was set aside, and the question now is on insisting upon the disagreement of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23, or, as the gentleman from New Jersey would like, the Chair infers, to recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I think the parliamentary situation is that the motion to recede and concur with an amendment is in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is in order, and the Chair understood the gentleman from New Jersey, while he did not make that motion, that that was his intent. The gentleman from New Jersey moves to recede from disagreement to Senate amendment 23 and to agree to the same with an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. HAY. I offer the following substitute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That officers of the Army shall have the right to deposit their pay with Army paymasters under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe; such deposits shall bear interest at 3 per cent per annum, and shall not exceed in the aggregate $5,000 for any one officer at any one time.

Mr. PARKER. Does any gentleman desire any time on this?

Mr. HAY. I offer a substitute.

Mr. PARKER. I have nothing further to say. I believe that this provision is for the good of the Army.

Mr. HAY. I offer a substitute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia moves to amend. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

The House instructs its conferees not to agree to any proposition as to deposits of funds by Army officers on interest.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I raise the question that that does not apply at all to the other question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendment is not in order at this time.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman from New Jersey is through, I believe. I only want to call the attention of the House——

Mr. PARKER. I certainly yield to the gentleman. How much time?

Mr. HAY. I do not want any time from the gentleman. The gentleman stated he was through.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia has the floor.

Mr. HAY. I just simply want to reiterate what I have said about this question of permitting Army officers to deposit their funds or their pay up to $5,000 upon interest at 3 per cent, which this law will require the Government to pay. I trust that members of this House will not encourage that sort of legislation. It is a bad and evil precedent. I do not wish to take up any more time of the House upon a matter with which everybody is familiar. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I shall not use half of the five minutes that the gentleman so courteously yielded me. I want to direct the attention of the House to the fact that the gentleman from New Jersey, in discussing this proposition, used what I believed to be exactly the proper term in describing it. He called it the establishment of a savings bank. My understanding of savings banks has always been that they were business institutions, conducted upon business principles, and that while they paid interest upon their deposits it was less than the amount for which they loaned the money later. This proposition is to compel the Government to pay 3 per cent interest on money, when it can borrow it for 2 per cent.

Mr. CAPRON. Just a word in reply to the gentleman from Texas. I would like to state what perhaps is not remembered by all the members of the House, that already the enlisted men in the Army, without limit, are allowed to deposit with the paymaster any amount of money they please, and receive interest at 4 per cent, which law has been in force for some time. Now, the Adjutant-General of the Army, appearing before the Military Committee, stated that he thought this was a very important provision for the assistance of young officers of the Army. They are ordered to the Philippines, or to the frontier posts, and far away from home and banking facilities. They have no opportunity to deposit savings from their salaries. In case they desire to accumulate a little fund there is no way to keep it save in their pockets. It would not aid any class of officers except those referred to, and it would be used in a very small way, but would be a very great advantage to those young officers going on duty at the beginning of their service to have an opportunity given to them, when there was no other at hand, to have a fund upon which they could draw for their future small needs, that you give them as officers the opportunity for making this deposit. That was the reason the amendment was placed in the bill, and it is to me a very sufficient reason for retaining it, with the limitation of $5,000—the amount placed upon it in conference as has been reported, and included in the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few remarks upon this question as a member of the Military Committee. I heartily concur in what has been said by my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. CAPRON]. This opportunity offered to the officer to place some of his money with the Government and receive interest at the rate of 3 per cent per annum is not compulsory upon him, but if he desires to lay away some money to aid him as years are approaching and the responsibilities of later life fall upon him, this gives him an ample opportunity to do it. As the law now is, at least $4,000,000 are now deposited with the Government by the enlisted soldiers of the Army. They are now receiving 4 per cent for that money.

It was stated before the committee by Maj. Gen. H. C. Corbin, the Adjutant-General of the Army, that the lending of this money by these soldiers to the Army had largely improved the character and standing of the enlisted men. Under this system they feel as if they have some interest at stake. It makes them better soldiers. And I wish to say to this committee that the personnel of the enlisted men of the American Army is equal, if not superior, to that of the enlisted men of any army in the world. The purpose of this measure is to give to young officers of the Army a like opportunity to lay aside some of their money and get 3 per cent interest for it.

But my good friend and colleague from Texas says that there are savings banks. So there are, and they are paying 4 per cent. If the officer desires to make money and is shrewd in business calculations he will place his money at 4 per cent in the savings bank and not at 3 per cent in the Government Treasury. But the opportunity for putting money in the savings banks is not good so far as concerns all the officers. They are scattered practically all over the United States and, in view of our outside possessions, I might say all over the world. Savings banks are not in existence everywhere.

Now, this provision will give the young officer an opportunity to put his money in the hands of the paymaster, in the care of the Government, and to obtain it readily when necessary. By reason of changes made under the military law the officer may be stationed here to-day and to-morrow he may be ordered elsewhere. He may be assigned to duty four years, if you please, at one place and then transferred to another. He may be assigned to duty here to-day and to-morrow, being promoted by reason of his lineal rank, he may be with another regiment; but here is the Government owing him his money and constantly keeping it in readiness for him. If he desires the money when he removes to a new place he simply draws upon the paymaster, and his account is kept open. He does not have to close it up as with a savings bank; he does not by reason of these changes lose any interest that may be due him.

For reasons like this, and for the good of the service, believing that men who own their homes, men who have property, have not only an interest as citizens, but have a double interest as property owners and as citizens, I believe this provision will tend to the betterment of the young officer, as it has tended to the betterment of the enlisted soldier, and will work no hardship to the Government.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion of Mr. FOSS, the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts in the chair), and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 17288) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Navy-yard, Portsmouth, N. H.: Removal of Hendersons Point, to complete, $549,000; quay wall, to extend, $75,000; grading, to continue, $25,000; railroad and rolling stock, additions, $8,000; sewer systems, extensions, $4,000; water systems, extensions, $4,000; tools for yards and docks, additional, $2,000; locomotive crane and track, to complete, $50,000; electric plant, extensions, $15,000; central heating plant, extensions, $15,000; steel-plant building for construction and repair (to cost not to exceed $150,000), to continue, $50,000; blasting in front of quay wall, $25,000; naval prison, $95,000 (toward the construction of the naval prison herein authorized there is also hereby reappropriated and made available the unexpended balance of appropriations made by the acts approved March 3, 1901, and July 1, 1902, under the general title "Public Works, Bureau of Yards and Docks." for extension of the naval prison, navy-yard, Boston, Mass.); in all, $917,000.

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all commencing with line 1, page 25, to and including the word "Massachusetts" in line 8, same page.

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Chairman, this is simply a business proposition. The Secretary of the Navy has reported that the naval prison which is now located at Boston should be removed from the navy-yard at that point. He suggests that it should be removed to Portsmouth, N. H. Portsmouth is one of the active business yards of the Government, and if we are to get rid of the prison at Boston because that is a business yard, it does seem to me that it ought not to be carried to Portsmouth, N. H. In addition to this we have only two naval prisons, one located at Mare Island, on the Pacific coast, and the other at Boston, on the Atlantic coast. Now, if the prison is to be removed from Boston it ought to be located at some central point on the Atlantic coast. The Secretary reports in favor of the removal from Boston, and I doubt not this recommendation is well founded. Several years ago the naval bill carried $20,000, and last year $60,000, for the improvement of the naval prison at Boston.

Now, the further improvement of the naval prison at Boston is to be abandoned, and the question is where shall the prison go. It seems to me it ought to go to some central point. We have on the Atlantic coast at Port Royal a navy-yard now owned by the Government and not used for active navy-yard purposes. The Secretary of the Navy, in his hearing before the committee, said that we had spent $1,300,000 there and we had many buildings which were new and had never been occupied. We have 80-odd acres of land, and the navy-yard at that place has been moved to Charleston, S. C. Now, what is more appropriate than that we should take Port Royal as the place for this naval prison? I understand that the people who are sent to the naval prisons are those confined for the minor offenses, such as desertion, absence without leave, and it is unreasonable to locate this prison at the extreme northern boundary of the Government.

It ought to be located at some point which will be easily accessible; and as we are abandoning Port Royal as a navy-yard, it seems that the 85 acres of land and improvements, costing $1,300,000, should be utilized for this naval prison. If it goes to Portsmouth, N. H., we will spend a large amount in equipping buildings at that point. It ought not to be located there. As a business proposition it ought to go to Port Royal. As a matter of convenience to the naval establishment it ought to be nearer the center of our Atlantic coast. My motion is to strike out the appropriation for the location of the prison at Portsmouth, N. H.; and if that succeeds, I shall follow it later, when we reach Port Royal, with an amendment authorizing the Secretary of the Navy in his discretion to locate the prison at that point.

Mr. LESSLER. Mr. Chairman, the motives that guided the committee in locating the prison at Portsmouth, N. H., and taking it away from Boston were twofold. In the first place, the Boston yard is growing as well as Portsmouth, and the facilities there are growing smaller each year, and the building now used as a naval prison is very much needed for other purposes, as shown by the hearing, while at Portsmouth they have an island, called Seavey Island, which contains 106 acres and which the Government now owns; and when Henderson Point is removed, as I am given to understand by members from that State, it will add 30 acres to that. In other words, we have here the land now, and to go away down to Port Royal, away from the stations at Norfolk, New York, and Boston, where men work, would add to the expense of transportation an amount greater, I think—although we have not considered that precise question—than even the removal of the prison to Portmouth, N. H. On page 40 of the Secretary's hearing, the Secretary gives the report of the Advocate-General of the Navy, which shows the number of prisoners confined in Boston. The motive guiding the committee was one of economy and substantial business interest of the Navy, and I hope that the gentleman's amendment will not be concurred in.

Mr. DAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to say, in addition to what has been said against this proposed amendment, that some years ago Congress determined to remove the naval station from Port Royal to Charleston, S. C., and it has been the fixed purpose of the Department and, I think, at least of a majority of the committee, to see to it that this station at Port Royal shall be dispensed with. If there be any one single danger to the Navy at the present time, it is that too much of it will get on the land, the danger of having stations established all over the country for the purpose of the land Navy, instead of taking care of the Navy at sea. Port Royal will be a port where comparatively few vessels will come in. It will be out of the way for the delivery of these prisoners. Not a single building there can be utilized for this purpose. It will be a separate institution, which will have to be maintained at a separate cost and at extra cost, if located there.

Mr. RIXEY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. DAYTON. Certainly.

Mr. RIXEY. In the hearings before the Committee Secretary Moody made this statement:

And if we build up the one at Charleston we shall ultimately abandon the one at Port Royal. They are only, from light to light, 55 miles apart. But yet we have property at Port Royal which cost $1,300,000, roughly speaking, as I recall it, and a good many buildings which are absolutely new and never have been used at all.

Speaking of the disposition of the property, he said:

We paid, roughly speaking, $17,000 for the land, for 85 acres of land, or rising $170 an acre on the average. I asked somebody down there what land was worth in that neighborhood. He said: "Well, say $10 an acre, if you can find anybody that will buy it."

Mr. DAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I am obliged to the gentleman for the statement he has read. It simply reenforces the argument I am making. Not a single dollar of the investment there can be utilized in this naval prison. The only advantage that we would derive from it would be the fact that we own the land there. I insist that it will be for the interests of this Government to dispose of that land at any price as quickly as we possibly can, to avoid the constant danger of building up a separate institution within 50 or 55 miles of the Charleston Navy-Yard. We have some advantages at Portsmouth. We have the land. We have it properly located, away from the regular navy-yard, upon an island, and at a port where vessels may come and it will be no inconvenience to deliver the prisoners who are to be confined for minor offenses within the prison walls, while if this prison be located at Port Royal it will require in many instances, if not in all, a special trip of many miles by these vessels in order to deliver these prisoners.

It will establish a separate institution to be maintained there and will create a menace—I use that word advisedly—of having something else located there in order to have a Government institution at Port Royal, simply because we have the land. It seems to me the wise policy of Congress is to dispose of, sell out root and branch, that land there at Port Royal and let the naval yard at Charleston be built, if it is to be built, and avoid the danger of having other things located at Port Royal. It has been insisted, I want to say to the members here, that it was our duty to establish a naval training station at Port Royal simply because we had the land and buildings there.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, as I recollect the testimony of the Secretary, he stated that we had this investment there of about $1,300,000, and I think the question was asked him if we could not dispose of it. He said he had made some inquiries trying to ascertain whether we could dispose of it or not, and that he had been unable to find a purchaser, and, as I recollect it, in his opinion we can not dispose of the property we have at Port Royal, S. C.

Mr. DAYTON. Will the gentleman pardon an interruption?

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Certainly.

Mr. DAYTON. That property largely consists of the dry dock which is located there, and the buildings, no one of which, I think the gentleman will admit, could possibly be used for this prison.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. I was just coming to that point. We have 85 acres of land at Port Royal. We have several new buildings there. I do not pretend to say that any one of those buildings would be a suitable prison at present, but I do contend that for one-third of the amount this item carries for a naval prison at Portsmouth, N. H., you can fit one of these buildings as a suitable naval prison. This item carries, as I understand it, $155,000 for this naval prison at Portsmouth, N. H. That is, there is a direct appropriation of $95,000 for that purpose and a reappropriation for this purpose of $60,000 carried in the last bill for enlarging the prison at Boston, but not used, making $155,000.

So, if you consider it from the point of economy, we will certainly save money in the first instance by making a naval prison of some of these buildings on our property at Port Royal. Then, we should consider that the probability is that the center of our naval operations hereafter will be far south of New Hampshire. The activities in Cuba and in the South American Republics, the building of the isthmian canal, the centering of the great ocean fleets toward that canal, indicate that fact; and all things considered, Port Royal will be nearer the center of our naval activities hereafter than Portsmouth. In fact, it is hardly probable that we will ever have much activity in the North Atlantic. The trouble that the United States may incur, if it incurs any, will probably come from some of the West Indian or South American entanglements, and the base of naval warfare in American waters will be probably to the south of Port Royal.

Mr. LESSLER. Mr. Chairman, what the gentleman states now is a question of probability. Is it not a fact that for the present purposes of the Navy—our navy-yards and where we build ships and where our sailors would go—they are nearer to Portsmouth to-day than to Port Royal?

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. I do not know the distances to Portsmouth from the various navy-yards. I should think, though, that from Washington city Port Royal would be nearer than Portsmouth.

Mr. LESSLER. But how about Newport, how about New London, how about New York?

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. We have the Washington Navy-Yard, the Norfolk Navy-Yard, and the Charleston Navy-Yard, all nearer to Port Royal than Portsmouth.

Mr. LESSLER. The gentleman knows there is nothing at the Charleston Navy-Yard yet.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. We are to have a navy-yard there. It is already provided for. There is no doubt about having it. But, as a matter of economy, and to get it nearer to the center of our operations and of our Atlantic coast, it seems to me, having the property already there and being able to fit a building there for a naval prison at much less expense than this item carries, that good judgment would adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a word on this. The policy of this House and of Congress, as I understand it, in the past has been to abandon the Port Royal Navy-Yard. We have abandoned that and gone to Charleston, which is only about 50 or 60 miles away. Now, are we going to continue that policy or are we going to adopt another one? Of course the gentleman says, "Why, we have the Government land down there; let us put this prison down there." Next year perhaps some one will come along and say, "Let us put another building there;" and then the next year some one else will say, "Let us put another building there," and in a few years you will have a full-fledged navy-yard right alongside of the Charleston Navy-Yard. That is the trouble with this whole proposition.

Now, the Secretary has been down there and made a careful investigation of this whole matter. He came before the committee and expressed himself in these words. Said he:

> If the whole thing could be sold outright to somebody, it would be a good thing for the people in the neighborhood and for the United States.

That is in his printed hearing.

Now, so far as Port Royal is concerned, the water is shallow there. You can not get at it by railroad. And yet you want to establish a naval prison, where you will expect vessels to come in and land the prisoners. The only thing, in my judgment, for us to do, when we are going to abandon Port Royal, is to abandon it or have a full-fledged navy-yard there.

Mr. RIXEY. Will the gentleman tell us why he thinks this naval prison ought to be located at the extreme northern part of our coast? Why not select some central point? If Port Royal will not suit him, why not take League Island or some central place?

Mr. FOSS. You know how cramped our navy-yards are at Boston and New York for room.

Mr. RIXEY. Well, it is likely——

Mr. FOSS. The Secretary of the Navy said we had this island up there in the Portsmouth Navy-Yard, with plenty of land, easily defended, and a proper location for this naval prison.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. I will say to the gentleman that I am informed there is a railroad to Port Royal.

Mr. FOSS. Recently built?

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. I do not know. That is my information.

Mr. FOSS. A trolley line?

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. I do not know.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I move to strike out the last word. I do not intend to antagonize any of the items in this paragraph for improvement of the Portsmouth Navy-Yard. I think it proper, however, to call the attention of the House to what is being done there. It is very remarkable that some years since Congress authorized the building of a dry dock at the Portsmouth yard. The cost was in the neighborhood of $1,000,000; I have not the exact figures. At the last session of Congress, in order to enable ships to be docked in that dry dock when finished, Congress authorized the expenditure of $749,000 to remove Hendersons Point and permit vessels to reach the dock.

In the paragraph just read the sum of $917,000 is appropriated for the improvement of this yard. Every single item estimated for by the Bureau of Yards and Docks, with the exception of one item of $30,000, has been allowed by the committee. If it be the intention—and I have no doubt the policy is well established—to have two great navy-yards upon the New England coast, it is proper for these appropriations to be made. The Portsmouth yard is within 45 miles of the Boston yard. Admiral Melville, in his report for this year, states that the buildings of the engineering department there are totally unfitted for the use of his department, that the buildings are obsolete, that they were erected before modern appliances had been adopted or even thought of.

This committee can go on and expend these great sums in improving as many of the navy-yards as it desires. It will yet regret the day that it started in to do so. Gentlemen who have most strongly opposed building war ships in the navy-yards of the Government are the ones who have been urging and insisting upon these extravagant expenditures for these navy-yards. The time is coming—indeed, it is at hand—when there will not be sufficient repair work to be done upon vessels of the Navy to keep occupied even two of the great navy-yards of the country, and then Congress will be be forced, unwilling, perhaps, to continue the policy, that I believe in, of building some ships in the Government yards.

I do not intend to antagonize a single item in this paragraph. I have prepared some statements which show the amounts estimated for to improve the various yards under the Bureau of Yards and Docks, and the amounts allowed by the committee in this bill. It is of some peculiar significance that yards like Portsmouth, which until about five years ago was practically closed, and Bremerton, in Puget Sound, have been allowed appropriatione aggregating over $900,000, practically every dollar asked, whils the sums for improvements necessary at the Norfolk yard and at the New York yard, the principal yards in the country, have been cut in two.

I do not propose to comment upon the policy of the committee in this respect. It speaks for itself. Recently, in the press of the country, principally, perhaps, around New York, it has been stated that the Raleigh, which has been at Portsmouth since 1899, left that yard after having been thoroughly overhauled. It came down the coast, and upon arriving at the New York yard it was necessary to order those repairs to be thoroughly gone over again.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask that my time may be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that his time may be extended five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FITZGERALD. To-day I inquired about this matter of the Secretary of the Navy. I was informed that the statement could not be said to be entirely correct; that this ship did take quite a long time to have the repairs completed, because it was practically the first work of the kind done at the Portsmouth yard; that it had not the equipment nor men of sufficient experience required to do the work. I was also informed that this was merely a condition that followed all ships when overhauled or when new vessels were put into commission.

Nevertheless there was something in the rumor. Certainly it is an extraordinary condition of affairs that a vessel is sent to one place to have a certain work done upon it and is then sent to some other place to have it properly completed. It is fortunate, indeed, that there is at least one yard where a vessel can be sent with confidence in the results that will be had there.

Mr. Chairman, I have compiled from the report of the Secretary and from this bill a statement showing the amounts estimated as essential for the proper improvement of the different navy-yards under the Bureau of Yards and Docks and the amounts allowed by the committee and appropriated in this bill for the same purposes.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 2,000 copies of the report of the War Department on the receipts and expenditures in Cuba during its occupation by the United States, 1,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, 750 copies for the use of Senate, and 250 copies for the use of the War Department.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 15804) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. STEWART, Mr. PLATT of Connecticut, and Mr. JONES of Arkansas as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 1605. An act granting a pension to John S. Whitlege;

H. R. 13257. An act to refund penalty to the Bank of Colfax, Iowa; and

H. R. 7648. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River and to establish it as a post-road.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Navy-yard, Boston, Mass.: Sewer system, extensions, $15,000; electric-light plant, extensions, $15,000; water-closets, additional, $5,000; paving, to continue, $50,000; drains, $5,000; railroad system, extensions, $24,000; pile driver, $6,500; tools for yards and docks, $10,000; paint shop for construction and repair, $35,000; steel shears, improvements to, $15,000; refitting and improving buildings 42 and 43, $40,000; central heating system, extensions, $20,000; extension of building No. 107, $50,000; in all, navy-yard, Boston, $290,500.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that this section may be passed over, to await a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, which I understand is being prepared to be forwarded to the chairman of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that this section be passed over. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Navy-yard, New York, N. Y.: Paving and grading, to continue, $20,000; dredging, to continue, $25,000; railroad system, extensions, $15,000; improvements to building No. 126, $15,000; electric plant, extensions, $30,000; quay wall between dry docks Nos. 2 and 3 (to be immediately available), $25,000; rebuilding wharves on cob dock, $25,000; new roof for building No. 23, $20,000; piers, additional, $100,000; coal bins and tracks for yards and docks (to be immediately available), $2,500; extension of building No. 116, $4,500; in all, navy-yard, New York, N. Y., $282,500.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 17, page 26, after the word "dollars," the following:
"Repairing and rebuilding crane track around dry dock No. 1, $16,000."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the report of the Secretary of the Navy in the recommendations and estimates for improvements at the navy-yard at New York asks for appropriations aggregating $501,200. The committee in the bill has allowed $282,500, and thus has omitted a number of items. This amendment will authorize one of the items omitted by the committee. The report of the Secretary on this item says:

A considerable amount has been expended lately on repairs of this track. Owing to the rotting of the pile foundations radical repairs are necessary, and this appropriation is asked that the track may be put in first-class condition.

The piling upon which the track for tais crane is built has been in bad condition. There is required for this crane, carrying heavy pieces of material, a solid foundation. This appropriation is essential to prevent what may be some day a serious accident. There are some other items which have been estimated for which I will not press upon the committee, because the committee having considered them and decided that they should not be allowed at this time, I will not question their judgment. But I refer to what is contained in the Secretary's report, "that on account of the rottenness of the piling supporting this track around this dry dock radical repairs are necessary," as an urgent reason for the adoption of this amendment. It is simply in the interest of the safety of the men engaged about that dry dock and for the protection of the work being done in it that I offer the amendment, and I hope the chairman will accept it.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I call for the reading of the amendment.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is one of the items of page 158 of the Secretary's report.

Mr. FOSS. I have no objection to it.

The question was considered; and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. That will necessitate a change of the total.

Mr. FOSS. Yes; and I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may make the change.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will make the necessary change in the total.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Navy-yard, Puget Sound, Washington: Sewer system, extensions, $5,000; to continue grading, $30,000; fire-protection system, extensions, $10,000; electric-light plant, extensions, $3,000; telephone system, extensions, $1,000; railroad and equipment, extensions, $10,000; boat shop for construction and repair, to continue (to cost not to exceed $150,000, for which contract is hereby authorized), $50,000; water-closets, additional, $2,500; water system, extensions, $8,000; foundry and coppersmith's shop, to complete, $50,000; boiler and blacksmith shop, to complete, $50,000; heating system, extensions, $3,000; extension of dry-dock boiler plant, $10,000; extension of general office building, $5,000; two officers' quarters, $10,000; sick quarters, to complete, $4,200; locomotive crane and track about dry dock (to cost $90,000), $40,000; timber floats and gangway bridges, $2,000; garbage scow, $1,500; in all, navy-yard, Puget Sound, Washington, $295,200.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "dollars," in line 6, page 30, insert the following: "Sawmill and accessories, $35,000."

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the liberality with which the committee has treated our navy-yard, and if I did not think this would be an economical thing on the part of the Government I would not ask the committee to adopt it, and after I have explained the matter if the committee should not agree with me I shall not press it strongly. No estimate has been sent in by the Secretary of the Navy for this appropriation. I will say that the Bureau of Construction and Repair, however, requested the Bureau of Yards and Docks to send an estimate for this appropriation to the Secretary of the Navy.

This was not done, or if it was sent, it was cut out. I will say, however, that the Department is heartily in favor of this appropriation, and while the Secretary of the Navy told me that he did not feel that it would be proper for him to send a further estimate in to the committee, yet, he stated, he would authorize the admiral of the Bureau of Construction and Repair to give me the facts in regard to this matter so that I could present it. I did not get the facts in time to present to the committee before they had decided on their bill. In a letter under the date of January 19 from the Bureau of Construction and Repair they state that "in a letter from this Bureau to the Bureau of Yards and Docks dated July 31, 1902, it was requested that the Bureau include in its estimate for the next fiscal year estimates for a new sawmill," and in the letter of December 5, 1902, they estimated the cost at $35,000, the amount I have put in the amendment I have just submitted.

A provision for this sawmill has been recommended and estimated for by the local contractor at the yard for several years past, and under date of January 20 they sent me a letter from the Bureau of Construction and Repair, giving the recommendation of the local constructor, as follows:

BUREAU OF CONSTRUCTION AND REPAIR,
NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., January 20, 1903.

DEAR SIR: In further reply to your letter of the 19th instant to Admiral Bowles relative to sawmill at Puget Sound Yard, I have the pleasure to quote an extract from a report by the naval constructor at that yard, under date of July 16, 1901:

"A sawmill is an important adjunct to any navy-yard, not necessarily for sawing lumber from the log, but for resawing stock timbers for the joiner shop and for dry-dock use.

"The necessity of having to order all lumber of the exact sizes required for work delays its completion in many ways and causes orders of small quantities in many cases to be placed in the sawmills which they are reluctant to accept.

"Even in a country such as the Sound district, where lumber is one of the principal industries, this is found to be a serious handicap on the work of the yard and has prevented the purchase of stock lumber for general purposes.

"In addition to this, however, it is certainly needless to point out the very great advantage of establishing a Government sawmill in the very center of the lumber district, where logs can be purchased at the cheapest figure and transported in booms as readily as to any other mill on the Sound.

"A sawmill at this yard, with suitable dry kilns and storage sheds, could furnish all the deck plank and miscellaneous pine lumber required by the Navy on the coast, and it would be a valuable investment in point of economy.

"Large quantities of this lumber have already been shipped to the naval station and vessels in the Far East, all of which could with advantage be prepared at this yard and shipped in Government vessels.

"In the general plan submitted provision has been made for a large establishment of this kind with dry kilns and storage sheds arranged according to the best practice on the Sound; from the wharves next the mill vessels can be readily loaded, while the space near by will be available for keeping a large quantity of logs in booms.

"The effect upon the lumber industry of the district of establishing such a mill at this yard could not be objectionable, for aside from the fact that the sum total of such work would be small compared with the output of the large mills here, the rigid inspection of the standard specifications makes it difficult to secure from them the quality of lumber required. Moreover, it is almost impossible to obtain air-dried lumber. The mills have such a large demand that it is not customary to keep lumber in stock sufficiently long to season it. Practically all of their lumber is shipped green or kiln dried.

"At the navy-yard stock lumber could be cared for in the best manner indefinitely and with no loss, could be selected to suit the standard specifications, and after a short time sufficient could be accumulated to suit all.

"Request has already been made for the plant hereby contemplated, and it is urged that this receive careful consideration.

"It is proposed that this plant shall contain a separate boiler installation suitable for consuming the waste from the mill; that the generators needed for power for some of the mill tools and for all of the joiner-shop tools be installed here, utilizing the generators now on hand when larger machines for the main plant have been secured."

ESTIMATES.

Sawmill machinery, including 10-inch band saw, automatic filing machinery, log turners, brow, gang saws, edgers, trimmers, cut-off saws, and resaws	$9,000
Planing-mill tools and installation	4,000
Installation dust collectors and bins	5,000
Boiler plant, main engines and installation	12,000
Dry kilns	6,000
Total	36,000

I also quote for your information extract from letter of July 10, 1900, from the assistant naval constructor at the Puget Sound Station, which is the original recommendation on this subject, as follows:

"I recommend that a modern steam sawmill be constructed at this station, to be located approximately as shown. This sawmill should be capable of handling logs 60 inches in diameter and 60 feet long, should be equipped with a large band saw, edging machine, cut-off saws, dimension planer, two small planers, and automatic saw-sharpening machines. It is recommended that preserved piles be used in the building and for the wharves; that the building be of galvanized iron, and of dimensions 225 by 300 feet.

"Logs can be purchased here in any quantity at reasonable prices, and I am convinced that yellow fir, particularly the second growth, if sawn and air-seasoned for about one year, is the cheapest and best available wood for deck planking. Heavy timbers of all kinds could be cut at small cost, both for this station or elsewhere, as might be required. Railroad cars could be brought over on scows from Seattle and conveniently loaded, as is the practice at many of the larger sawmills in this region. The estimated cost of this installation, including boilers, engine, sawmill machinery, building, and wharves, is $60,000."

Trusting that this information may be all that you can wish in regard to this matter, I am,

Very respectfully,

H. G. SMITH,
Naval Constructor, U. S. N.

BUREAU OF CONSTRUCTION AND REPAIR,
NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., January 19, 1903.

MY DEAR SIR: Referring to your letter of the 19th instant to Admiral Bowles, I beg to inform you that the Admiral is out of town for some days. I have therefore forwarded your letter to the Secretary of the Navy, with the following statement of facts:

"In a letter from this Bureau to the Bureau of Yards and Docks, dated July 31, 1902, it was requested that the Bureau of Yards and Docks should include in its estimates for the next fiscal year estimates for a new sawmill. In a letter dated September 5, 1902, to the Bureau of Yards and Docks, the estimated cost of this sawmill and wharf of wood, with wooden roof, tin sheathing, two wood floors, brick boiler house, and shaving bin of brick, steel roof, with steel ceiling, was $35,000. These recommendations were in accordance with the recommendations made by the naval constructor at the navy-yard, Puget Sound, in his annual report dated July 7, 1902, as follows:

"'In former reports I have pointed out the necessity of including a sawmill in the construction plant, not only for the economical and rapid prosecution of work, but as being particularly advantageous at this yard for sawing stock lumber from the log.

"'In plan No. 760 there has been outlined the general arrangement of a mill of moderate size, and a suitable location has been indicated in plan No. 746, in proximity to the joiner shop and having in the rear the dry kilns and lumber yards with sheds for stowage of stock.

"'This mill should be modeled after the mills of this neighborhood; with a separate boiler plant burning the waste from the mill; the saw and its accessories being driven by steam and the remainder of the machinery by electricity, obtained from the small generators now on hand, and installed in the mill.

"'In my opinion it is not necessary that this building should be of anything more than of wood construction.'

"The estimate for this building does not appear in the annual report of the chief of Bureau of Yards and Docks to the Department."

Very respectfully,

H. G. SMITH,
Naval Constructor, United States Navy.

Hon. W. L. JONES,
United States House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

Now, Mr. Chairman, these are the facts in reference to this matter. The demand for lumber has increased, and the price of lumber has come up very largely. The lumber mills have orders for months ahead of their capacity. Prices are high, much delay in work is caused, and I believe by the adoption of this amendment and the establishment of the sawmill at that point, by reason of the local conditions and local surroundings, and the necessities of the yard, it would in a short time save to the Government the amount of its cost. I submit to the committee this amendment upon this statement of facts.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, of course I would like to please the gentleman very much in regard to this matter, but it strikes me that this provision, inasmuch as it has not come from the Secretary of the Navy to the committee in the regular way in the estimates, was evidently not regarded by him or by the Department as very pressing this year.

Of course, we all realize that it is a difficult matter to keep down these estimates, by reason of the constant pressure from all sides; but the committee has gone over all of them, has given them the most careful and serious consideration, and has provided for those things which it believed to be necessary for this year.

Now, I think there is plenty of work for that station during the coming year to do in erecting the buildings provided for last year and in carrying out the new constructions provided for in the bill this year. They will have all they can do to carry out these provisions.

The question being taken, the amendment of Mr. JONES of Washington was rejected.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask unanimous consent to print with my remarks certain letters.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, public works, $3,757,940.

Mr. FOSS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert as a new paragraph, after line 18, page 31, the following:

"Public works, secretary's office: For necessary expenditures incident to the occupation and utilization of the naval station at Guantanamo, to be used for such purposes as the Secretary of the Navy may direct, $100,000.

Mr. FOSS. I ask the Clerk to read the letter which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 17, 1903.

SIR: Referring to the cession by Cuba to the United States of a site for a naval station at Guantanamo, it is particularly desirable that an appropriation be made, to be used by direction of the Secretary of the Navy, for the purposes of occupation and utilization of said station. It is impracticable at this time to state definitely what expenditures in detail are necessary or desirable to be made in connection with such occupation and utilization, but a sum not less than $100,000 should be available. I therefore recommend that the following be incorporated in the naval appropriation bill, under the caption "Public works, Secretary's Office:"

"For necessary expenditures incident to the occupation and utilization of the naval station at Guantanamo, Cuba, to be used for such purposes as the Secretary of the Navy may direct, and to be immediately available, $100,000."

Inclosed herewith is a statement showing approximately the general purposes and the funds required, which present themselves to the Department as desirable for taking immediate steps to promote the usefulness and availability of this station.

Very respectfully,

W. H. MOODY,
Secretary

Hon. GEORGE EDMUND FOSS,
Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs,
House of Representatives.

L. F. LIVINGSTON,
Managers on the part of the House.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its sesssion.

The Clerk read as follows:

PUBLIC WORKS, BUREAU OF NAVIGATION.

Naval Academy: The limit of expenditure for the construction of buildings and other necessary improvements at the Academy, as set forth in the act of June 7, 1900, be, and the same is hereby, increased to $10,000,000. The Secretary of the Navy may modify or alter all plans heretofore authorized covering all buildings and improvements as he may see fit.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to come in at the end of the paragraph just read.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of the pending paragraph insert:

"Provided, That all iron, steel, tools, lumber, oil, paint, and other material to be actually used in erecting said improvements may be imported into the United States free of all duty."

Mr. MUDD. I make a point of order on that amendment, but I am willing to reserve it if the gentleman from Tennessee wants to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order will be reserved.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I am very much surprised—and yet in one sense I am not, and I dare say the members of this House are not, if they will think for a moment—at the statement which we find in the RECORD of this morning on page 2312—a quotation from the language of Mr. Moody, Secretary of the Navy, who calls for $2,000,000 additional appropriation to carry out this work, heretofore contemplated at a cost of $8,000,000. The reason he states for wanting this additional $2,000,000 is that the cost of labor and material has increased 30 per cent since the last appropriation of $8,000,000, passed June, 1900. I will quote briefly the pertinent words of Secretary Moody:

Accordingly these two improvements will not be undertaken without further authority from Congress. But a still more serious question has arisen. The architect in charge of the improvements reports, after careful investigation, that the cost of labor and material to be used in the buildings and improvements not already under contract has increased more than 30 per cent since the original plans were adopted. It has therefore become impracticable to proceed further in the execution of the general plan without largely exceeding the limit of cost prescribed by Congress. No further contracts will be entered into until the subject is submitted to Congress and its will ascertained.

Now, gentlemen, it is plain to me that the Government is being "held up;" the people of the United States are held up by the steel and iron kings in the great work of enlarging our Naval Academy, the school where we educate our boys for the Navy, actually being held up! The Secretary says that he will not undertake the work unless $2,000,000 additional are given him. I ask that we let down the gap and let whoever bids in this matter have the legal right, which he has not now, to import all of his materials to erect this building free, and thus bring down the price of steel, steel beams, structural iron of all kinds.

Steel rails to-day are selling for about $28 and the same rail is sold to-day in London at $23. After paying insurance, traveling expenses, agencies, dockage, wastage, license, all of these extraordinary freight and traveling expenses, the steel and iron kings—trusts, all of them—still ship, and shipped last year $98,552,562 of American-made steel and iron products. Where? To free-trade Europe, and sold them in the face of products of the free labor right in the streets of London, and in Berlin and other cities of Europe. Yes, sir; we did all this; paid all those expenses, and successfully met, underbid, and undersold those foreign producers at their own doors; and this is an old story, too.

Mr. Chairman, this will hurt no one, and will help the Government. I hold here, sir, a quotation from the New York Commercial, dated only a few months ago—November 17, 1902—where Mr. Warwick, of Ohio, went to London, and he stated that he had gone there to buy from forty to fifty thousand dollars' worth of steel rails, because he not only could not afford to pay the prices at which the rails in this country were being sold, but that he could not get them at all, and bought them cheaper in Europe than in the United States.

The article reads:

OBLIGED TO BUY STEEL ABROAD—OHIO ENGINEER, UNABLE TO SECURE MATERIAL HERE, GOES TO EUROPE FOR SUPPLY—HE FINDS IT IN GERMANY—CHARTERS A BRITISH VESSEL AND EXPECTS THE TOTAL COST TO BE CHEAPER.

[Special cable to the Herald.]

The Herald's European edition publishes the following from its correspondent:

LONDON, Wednesday.

The scarcity of steel in the United States in comparison with the demand and the inability of steel concerns to fill orders for quick delivery are driving more structural-steel buyers abroad.

Mr. Warwick, a contracting engineer in Ohio, who was unable to get an order for structural steel filled in the time required by his contract, went to Germany and placed an order there for $40,000 to $50,000 worth of material. Then he came to London and chartered a vessel to take it to America.

He expects to have his steel delivered in Ohio cheaper than it would have cost him in the United States.

AMERICANS TO INSTALL RUSSIAN TELEPHONES.

ST. PETERSBURG, November 16, 1902.

An American tender to install underground telephones in the city for 315,000 rubles has been accepted by the authorities. The tender was on lower terms and easier conditions of payment than the offers of other bidders for the work.

Now, here is the Secretary of the Navy, who comes to Congress and says that because the material out of which we are to build this great Naval Academy at Annapolis has risen so in price and labor has risen so in price—because provisions, possibly, have also risen in price—he can not build this great building for his country in order that in time of war our flag may be better protected unless you give him $2,000,000.

Mr. Chairman, this is not a novel feature of legislation. We have done this before. We did it in the case of the Chicago fire—let in free of duty the material to rebuild and gifts from foreign nations to that terribly stricken people in Chicago in 1871 or 1872. It was done in the case of Boston and in many similar instances in the old days of the Republic. Why, only a few days ago, at the behest of a crying nation, we let down the tariff bars on coal, and to-day coal is teeming into our harbors to relieve our people, although the gentlemen on that side said when they made that report that it would relieve nobody; that they did this to satisfy "the cry of the people!" I have the figures here to show that ship after ship has come into our harbors to bring relief coal to our people, and coal has fallen in price. I ask now that relief be given to not only the American people, but to the Republic as such, to the Secretary of the Navy as such, and thus relieve our Treasury from being held up by trusts and the steel barons of this country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Does the gentleman wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I should like to discuss this matter. It is a very essential amendment, and I should like the indulgence of the House for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman wish to be heard on the point of order? The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MUDD] makes the point of order that it changes existing law.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will my friend yield to a question or two?

Mr. MUDD. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does the gentleman not think that the Government is being held up in this matter?

Mr. MUDD. On the point of order? [Laughter.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, now, let us get down among the people a while. Take a visit with me in this matter. Let us stand with the people one time for a change.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Chairman, I want to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I hope my friend will yield to me. He lives in that neighborhood and I am trying to help his people out of the jaws of the lion and the Republic from the clutches of its infant giant—the trusts.

Mr. MUDD. I never object to the gentleman from Tennessee talking.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I thank the gentleman. The gentleman is always anxious for information and never fails to get it and he will get it now. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to proceed for five minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to be recognized for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, gentlemen, I have already cited you here to Mr. Warwick, of Ohio. He said he had to go to England to get these rails because he could not get them at home and got them cheaper. I have an official report here, and a statement from a Mr. Havemeyer, a gentleman whom I do not know. We all know of him. An expert in such business. He said before the Industrial Commission only a few months back "that steel rails can be produced in the United States for $15 a ton." They are sent to England and sold, he says. They can be produced for $15 a ton "and they are worth $24 a ton." "The reason they are worth $24 a ton is because the people under the tariff are mulcted for the difference."

The chief of the Bureau of Statistics, in the absence of Mr. Austin, telephoned me a few moments ago at my request that steel rails were to-day selling, according to the New York Iron Age, at $28 a ton in New York. At the same time, Mr. Chairman, we find that Mr. Schwab said practically the same thing some time since—indeed, I have his word here going to show that. He said he was selling steel rails, which is practically the same thing as steel product of our country, in Europe at $23, and the same rails were selling here from $26 to $28. I will insert the words of both these and other gentlemen.

Mr. Havemeyer said:

Without the tariff, I doubt if we should have dared to take the risk of forming the trust. It could have been done; but I certainly should not have risked all I had, which was then embarked in the sugar business, in a trust unless the business had been protected as it was by the tariff.

* * * * * * *

Steel rails were exported at the time the steel schedule was under discussion. They were being sent to England and Scotland. They can be produced for $15 a ton; they are worth $24 a ton. Now, the reason they are worth $24 a ton is because the people, under the tariff, are mulcted for the difference. I am not talking about things that are ancient history, I am talking about things that exist. I am not talking as to whether 100 per cent was necessary or not. I am talking about the effect of the tariff to-day, which is the mother of these trusts which are mulcting the people, and there is not a line of it free from this abuse to-day.

Mr. Schwab, May 11, 1901, before this Industrial Commission said:

Q. Is it a fact generally true of all exporters in this country that they do sell at lower prices in foreign markets than they do in the home market?

A. That is true, perfectly true. * * *

Q. Would you say that when business is in a normal condition the export prices are regularly somewhat lower than home prices?

A. Oh, yes; always.

Q. Suppose you take the case of steel rails. Could you give us about the difference between the export and domestic price?

A. I would have to make a guess; I do not know definitely. The export price was about $23 a ton.

Q. And the price here?

A. Was $26 and $28.

Q. At the same time?

A. At the same time.

Mr. Henry W. Lamb, a prominent sheet-metal manufacturer of Boston, testified as follows:

The tariff trusts sell all their goods abroad cheaper than they do here, and this they are enabled to do by the protective tariff. If goods are imported into this country a duty must be paid, which enhances the price; the trusts are therefore able to a certain extent to extort from the consumers here more than they can secure if they sell abroad. They do desire to sell abroad, and they therefore sell abroad at a much lower price than to corresponding consumers in this country.

The sheet-metal industry in this country was growing very rapidly a year or two ago. It has had serious checks in this last year or two owing to the increased price of the sheet steel put up by the combination. Then I must say in domestic trade the effects of this tariff trust and their extortions are even worse than in foreign trade.

Senator KEARNS, Paris, August 23, 1901, said:

My trip satisfies me that the United States can compete successfully with Europe for the world's trade. One big Western State produces more breadstuffs than an average European nation.

American activity and American business are known in every country in Europe. American shoes, American machinery, clocks, locomotives, etc., are used everywhere. (New York Journal, special cable.)

We pay the freight, pay the insurance, pay the drummer, pay the dockage, pay the local taxes, if there are any, pay everything, and yet we go over to Europe and undersell the products of "pauper labor," that mines the coal and makes the iron which we undersell. We do this with our protected labor, the Republicans would say; but it is brains, ambition, and machinery that does it. And we produce in the United States at such a price that we can undersell this pauper-labor product right at the door of the "pauper" across the ocean. And, as I say, we sold in Europe in 1902 $98,000,000 in steel and iron products—made in this country—and into the Orient.

Mr. Chairman, heaven knows that this is nothing personally to me. I am here helping my country, helping the Republic as such in insisting on this amendment. If I were to consult my political possibilities I probably would not make this speech. We are making iron and steel in Tennessee and in Alabama, and the great financiers of that region mostly live right in my city and are my personal friends. But my country first. [Applause.] My friends are as near to me as to any man living, I think, but, Mr. Chairman, the Secretary comes here and says, "I have got to stop work unless you give me two millions more," and why? Because steel has been put up, nails have been put up, lumber has been put up, everything has been put, because we are tied up in a great menagerie of trusts here that the Republican party dare not destroy. [Applause.]

What else do I read from? Mr. Carnegie says that we make the cheapest and best steel in the world, and "the fact that we make the cheapest steel means the cheapest ships, the cheapest machinery, and a thousand and one articles of which steel is the basis." I quote him from the Review of the World's Commerce, 1900, our own publication, sent to Congress by President McKinley and Secretary Hay in 1901.

We are making the cheapest steel and the cheapest iron, and yet we have the dearest building products in this country, so very dear that out of an appropriation of $8,000,000 we have the Secretary of the Navy coming to us to say: "I am held up to the amount of 30 per cent on $8,000,000. Help me or I quit work." [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland makes the point of order against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee that it changes existing law.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That is exactly what we are doing with this bill, Mr. Chairman. We are changing existing law. This whole paragraph changes existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, I do not care much about technicalities when they directly or indirectly protect fraud. I want to cut through or break through them to the right. But, Mr. Chairman, this provision itself changes existing law. My amendment is to that provision. It changes the eight-million-dollar limitation, makes it a ten-million-dollar limitation, and gives the Secretary the right to undo the whole project. If the provision is in order, why not this proviso? I concede that it is a debatable question. I hope, however, that my friend will be as anxious to save the Republic from being "held up" in this case as he is to help his own people in local matters here day in and day out, as I know he does. My Maryland! My Maryland! Glorious State! But my whole country first, Mr. Chairman; and I do hope the gentleman will not insist on the point of order.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that in my desire to serve my country I am not second to the gentleman, but I am not sure that the gentleman's method of saving it is the correct one. My point of order is not based merely upon the ground that this is new legislation, but upon the further ground that it is not germane to the subject-matter.

Of course there is some new legislation in the paragraph, but that new legislation is authorized by the special rule under which the House is now acting. I do not think I have to argue the question further as to its being both new legislation and not germane. An amendment to the tariff law, which this is, pro tanto, is not germane to an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. It is very clear to the Chair that this amendment changes a provision of existing law, inasmuch as it repeals in part the present tariff law. Therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, just a moment.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, what paragraph are we on?

The CHAIRMAN. Page 32, line 6.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I reserved a point of order on the paragraph commencing with line 3 and ending with line 6.

Mr. FOSS. If the gentleman will withdraw the point of order I will move to strike out the words to which he objects.

Mr. DAYTON. I hope that will not be done.

Mr. FOSS. I understood the point of order to be on the words "to be immediately available."

Mr. DAYTON. I ask the gentleman from Indiana not to make that point of order, for the simple reason that this provision is for temporary quarters at the Academy made necessary by the increase in the number of cadets. While I agree that these words ought ordinarily to go out in an appropriation, yet we want these appointments made as speedily as possible, and in order to provide for them we must commence at once the building of these temporary quarters. There is no chance, in other words, to provide for the extra cadets unless we allow these buildings to be put up during these months. After the 4th of March the appointments can be made, and this bill will not be operative until the 1st day of July. During that period of time these quarters ought to be built. That is certainly a good reason why there should be an exception in this case.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. DAYTON. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon the point of order.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I should very much like to hear what the gentleman is saying.

Mr. DAYTON. I want to say to the gentleman that if the legislation——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. We can not hear what the gentleman says.

Mr. DAYTON. Pardon me just a moment.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Talk just a little bit louder.

Mr. DAYTON. I say, simply, if this——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Talk to the House, and not to your friend over there.

Mr. DAYTON. I want to say to the gentleman that this bill carries a provision for an additional number of cadets, and their appointments can take place after the 4th of March, or as soon as the bill becomes law. In order to take care of them it is necessary to put up temporary quarters. If this proposition to increase the number of cadets does not become law, or is not approved by this House, I want to say to the gentleman that I will ask to strike out this provision or allow it to be reduced. I admit it is subject to a point of order, and if the gentleman insists upon it it will have to go out; but I hope the gentleman will not insist upon it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. [A pause.] Well, if the gentleman does not care to yield to me, I will renew the point of order.

Mr. DAYTON. I am ready to answer a question. I did not hear the gentleman.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It was a courteous question. I desire to ask the gentleman from West Virginia whether in the hearings or in the report the Secretary of the Navy has stated that he thinks it necessary to have these temporary quarters.

Mr. DAYTON. Oh, yes. And an estimate has come through the Department, and has come from the authorities at the Naval Academy.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It, then, comes with the authority of the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I rise to a point of order. I do insist, as the gentleman is explaining an important matter, one which we will be called on to vote upon, that he should speak so that we can hear. I have not heard one word you have said. No one over here has.

Mr. DAYTON. That is a question of the order of the House and of my physical inability. I can not help it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Alabama to renew the point of order?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; I am satisfied.

Mr. DAYTON. I know that this matter ordinarily can be taken care of by the deficiency bill; but it is substantially a new provision; it is a separate provision; it will not be continued in any other appropriation bill. It will not, therefore, cause any difficulty or trouble, such as referred to in other appropriations, and certainly under these circumstances the gentleman will not insist, I hope, on his point of order.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I will ask the gentleman when these new cadets are to be appointed?

Mr. DAYTON. Immediately. The law provides for that.

Mr. HEMENWAY. That is simply a provision upon this bill?

Mr. DAYTON. Yes; it is; and if it does not go through, I say to the gentleman that I shall ask to return to this and reduce this appropriation.

Mr. HEMENWAY. In view of the fact that this appropriation can be taken care of on the deficiency bill should there be legislation passed, I feel I will have to insist upon the point of order.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I would like to ask the gentleman from West Virginia if this amount for this item is not and can not be a part of the ten millions, made by the increase of two millions?

Mr. DAYTON. I did not understand the gentleman's question.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The amendment permitted under the rule brought in by the Committee on Rules allows the limit of expenditure for the construction of buildings and other necessary improvements to be increased to $10,000,000; that is, from eight to ten millions.

Mr. DAYTON. Yes.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Why is not this next provision, "Building and furnishing additional temporary quarters," etc., provided for within that expenditure?

Mr. DAYTON. It is not provided because every dollar of the ten millions is necessary to complete the buildings according to the plans that have been adopted, and these temporary buildings are simply for the temporary accommodation of these cadets and will be torn down and removed.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. If it is necessary to expend more money there for the same cause, why did you not make it $10,060,000? Why take two bites at the cherry?

Mr. DAYTON. Why, possibly the gentleman's suggestion has merit. This is under the head of temporary repairs of quarters. These quarters will be torn down and will not be a part of the permanent establishment, and it was placed in this item, which has been a continuing item for repairs.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. But the gentleman knows that this is pure legislation in this matter.

Mr. DAYTON. But I want to call attention further to the fact that not a single dollar is appropriated of the ten millions to the permanent improvement of the buildings by this bill.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, in addition to what my colleague has just stated, I desire to emphasize this proposition. The gentleman says that this improvement is to be temporary. Indeed, the very words of the paragraph say "temporary quarters;" and yet we propose to take $60,000 down there and expend it on temporary quarters which they are going to tear down.

We are in the business, it seems, of spending thousands and thousands of dollars here annually and openly, of the public money, to put up "temporary quarters," somewhere, somehow, hire somebody to do it, occupy them but a short time, and before we can get any benefit from the structure we employ somebody at the public expense to tear down the structure—wise, frugal policy that! The very proposition itself, it seems to me, the very words of the paragraph itself, ought to condemn it.

Now, it may be that the quarters desired can and would be used, but we have done so far without these quarters, I do not know how long. Why can not they do without them until they expend this $10,000,000—until they can put up a magnificent permanent building which will be a credit to our Navy, a credit to our flag, an honor to our country?

Mr. MUDD. Where would you quarter the cadets in the meantime?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Where are you quartering them now? Where did you quarter Dewey, where did you quarter Hobson and all of these men that have grown great in the service of the country? Did you throw away $60,000 to do that?

Mr. MUDD. We are obliged to tear down some of the quarters that are now occupied before we can proceed to construct the new ones. We can not quarter the cadets on the ground or in the Severn River.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. When are you going to construct the new ones?

Mr. MUDD. As soon as Congress authorizes the money to do it with.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Of course you could not do it before, and Congress will make the appropriation at once. It is urged by Secretary Moody, and the rule adopted yesterday by the House in effect means an immediate appropriation to meet an emergency.

Mr. MUDD. Now, Mr. Chairman, I suggest that we strike out the words "to be immediately available."

Mr. DAYTON. Mr. Chairman, confessing the point of order, I offer this as an amendment or substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Repairs, Naval Academy: For building and furnishing additional temporary quarters and recitation rooms and for enlarging and furnishing the mess hall, $60,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman moves to amend by striking out the words "to be immediately available."

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to discuss the amendment for a few moments. I will ask the gentleman from Maryland how much money provided for the new Naval Academy has been expended?

Mr. MUDD. In round numbers about $5,000,000 is contracted for; I do not know just how much has been expended.

Mr. HEMENWAY. With that amount of money expended, are they unable to take care of the additional number of cadets?

Mr. MUDD. I understand that to be the report that comes to us from the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. HEMENWAY. It strikes me that with $5,000,000 expended, and the limit of increase put at $10,000,000, that there ought to be no occasion for the expenditure of $60,000 to take care of the additional number of cadets.

Mr. DAYTON. It will require two years to build the headquarters, and while they are building they can not be occupied.

Mr. HEMENWAY. How long have they been building?

Mr. DAYTON. About a year on the cadet headquarters—possibly six or eight months.

Mr. HEMENWAY. How many cadets will be added?

Mr. DAYTON. The number will be substantially doubled.

Mr. HEMENWAY. How many have you there now?

Mr. DAYTON. We have 405, and the vacancies will run it up to about 480.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Then there will be added about 500?

Mr. DAYTON. Yes.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Can not you rent buildings outside?

Mr. DAYTON. You can not go outside of the grounds, for the midshipmen are under the control of the Government and must be on the reservation.

Mr. HEMENWAY. You think in addition to the $10,000,000 that it requires $60,000 for temporary quarters?

Mr. DAYTON. It is absolutely necessary to have temporary quarters; you can not conduct the school without them.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. DAYTON].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Naval training station, California (buildings): Extension of new wharf (to be immediately available), $4,250; in all, $4,250.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on this section.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the words "to be immediately available."

Mr. HEMENWAY. Then I withdraw the point of order.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, public works, Bureau of Navigation, $296,250.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, as a friend of the American Navy and as an advocate of a naval policy that will ere long make it possible for our Government to have one of the best and one of the greatest navies in all the world, I desire at this time to send to the Clerk's desk and have read a letter from the secretary of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation, forwarding to me certain resolutions unanimously adopted by that body on the 4th day of February, 1903. I ask the Clerk to read the letter and the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

NEW YORK BOARD OF TRADE AND TRANSPORTATION,
New York, February 6, 1903.

Hon. WM. SULZER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The New York Board of Trade and Transportation has adopted the resolutions herewith, favoring the increase of the strength of the United States Navy, and will thank you to present the document to the House of Representatives.

Very truly, yours, FRANK S. GARDNER, Secretary.

ROOMS OF THE NEW YORK BOARD OF TRADE
AND TRANSPORTATION, 203 BROADWAY,
New York, February 4, 1903.

At the regular monthly meeting of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation held this day the following resolution was unanimously adopted, viz:

"Resolved, The New York Board of Trade and Transportation earnestly recommend that the Congress of the United States take immediate measures to secure a naval strength in both ships and personnel commensurate with our requirements and such as will be fully adequate to meet every possible contingency which may arise from our present or future position as a world power, thus insuring ample protection to our commerce, preserving our dependencies from molestation, and commanding respectful observance of our national policies. President Roosevelt in his message says: 'A good Navy is not provocative of war. It is the surest guaranty of peace.' Secretary of the Navy Moody in his report says: 'What would have been an adequate Navy some years ago is totally inadequate for the performance of our duties growing out of our new possessions in the Pacific and Atlantic and the determination of Congress to construct a canal across the Isthmus.'"

A true copy.

[SEAL.] OSCAR S. STRAUSS, President.

Attest:

FRANK S. GARDNER, Secretary.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, the resolutions just read were unanimously adopted by one of the largest and most important commercial bodies of the city of New York. They speak for themselves. I concur in them, and I am pleased to present them at this time to this House and have them spread upon the records of Congress.

And now, Mr. Chairman, just a few words more. I am gratified to see that this naval appropriation bill carries out the idea expressed in these resolutions; and I think the gentleman from Illinois, the chairman, and his associates on the Committee on Naval Affairs justly entitled to our congratulations and the thanks of the people of the country for having prepared and presented a bill which substantially carries out our present naval policy. This country needs and must have a great navy. We need a navy adequate to enforce the Monroe doctrine, should it ever be assailed; a navy big enough to protect our commerce and our long line of seacoast in case of war; a navy great enough to make our flag respected on every sea, and a navy formidable enough to insure our peace when we want peace.

The American people take a just pride in their Navy. They have every reason to be proud of it—to be proud of its past, to be proud of it now, and to be proud of its future. The Navy is one of America's greatest institutions—a bulwark of defense, a mighty engine of offense—and should be liberally supported by Congress for all its wants by generous appropriations. Every dollar spent on the Navy is just so much money expended for insurance against war. A better investment could not be made. We must all stand by the Navy. The most unthinking individual in the country realizes how important it is for the Government to have a strong, a great, and a mighty navy. We have a larger and more vulnerable seaboard than any other country in the world. We will soon, I believe, have a great merchant marine. We have great cities of immense wealth, of commerce, and of property, the value of which is incalculable, all along our seacoasts. They must and should be protected, and they can not be better protected, better safeguarded, than by a modern, a powerful, and an efficient navy. Our naval programme must be up to the times. Our naval policy should be progressive and always ahead of any other country in the world. In this way only can we maintain our supremacy as the greatest commercial and industrial nation on earth. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Naval hospital, Washington, D. C.: The erection and completion of new buildings for the accommodation of the United States naval hospital, Washington, D. C., on the grounds belonging to the United States Naval Museum of Hygiene, $125,000: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to sell and convey the plot of land and buildings thereon, known as the United States naval hospital, Washington, D. C., situated at Ninth street and Pennsylvania avenue SE., in the city of Washington, D. C., to the highest bidder at public sale, and, after deducting the expenses incident to said sale, he shall pay into the Treasury of the United States, to the credit of the naval hospital fund, the net amount received from said sale: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy shall have the right to reject any and all bids.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I reserve a point of order on the paragraph just read.

Mr. LESSLER. Mr. Chairman, the Surgeon-General of the Navy was before our committee and made a very earnest plea to us that a new hospital be built in Washington for the use of the Navy. At his request two of us visited the present naval hospital, right near here on Pennsylvania avenue. We went through it from basement to roof. We found it to be an old building about 40 years old, looking out upon three streets, with the noisy street cars running in front of it. The hospital—an old mansion—is badly adapted for the purposes of a hospital. It shows the constant use it has had. It furnishes very poor provision for taking care of the physicians who are in charge of that hospital. Its plumbing is old.

If you go to the top floor, you get the odor of the cooking going on down in the basement. The inmates are poorly provided for. There is but one room for sick officers. It is desired to build a new hospital upon ground at the other end of the city in a pleasant location.

I suppose the gentleman's point of order is directed against the provision authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to locate this new building on a plot of ground designated, and to put into the naval hospital fund the money accruing from the sale of the property now occupied. We looked into this question also. I want to say, in the first place, that this disposition of the money corresponds exactly with what was done when the new hospital was built at Brooklyn, N. Y.

We felt that the money to accrue from the sale of this old property here should go to the benefit of the naval hospital fund rather than into the Treasury of the United States. We felt that the naval hospital fund should receive this money and use it rather than have it go back to the Treasury, while the Department, if it needed money, must wait upon Congress.

Sir, there is no provision in this bill that is more necessary than this provision for the erection of a new naval hospital in Washington. I want on this floor to commend the administration of the present Surgeon-General of the Navy. He is moderate in his requests to the committee. He is always ready with a reason why his requests should be granted.

This question has been carefully investigated by the committee, and I think that no provision can be more necessary than this which looks to caring for our sick and ailing sailor boys. They should be taken care of in modern buildings, with modern sanitation, with modern methods of conducting a hospital, instead of being placed in that old building, sending out its foul smells, right in the heart of the city of Washington. I hope the gentleman from Indiana will not insist on his point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from New York [Mr. LESSLER] inform the Chair whether there is now a hospital on the ground of the Naval Museum of Hygiene.

Mr. LESSLER. No; there is not a hospital there. But the land is owned, I understand, by the Government. I read from page 5 of the hearings before the committee:

The CHAIRMAN. Where is that?

Referring to the site selected for the new hospital.

Admiral RIXEY. At the foot of Twenty-third street, near the river. There we have water communication with the navy-yard and ship. It is an ideal site for a hospital. It is high, well shaded, with beautiful trees. The Secretary of the Navy has inspected the hospital and proposed site for the new hospital, and has strongly expressed himself in favor of the new hospital.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a museum up there now, is there not?

Admiral RIXEY. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. A museum of hygiene?

Admiral RIXEY. A museum of hygiene and medical school.

The CHAIRMAN. And this property belongs to the Navy Department?

Admiral RIXEY. It belongs to the Navy Department.

The CHAIRMAN. And is under the jurisdiction of the Navy Department?

Admiral RIXEY. We had 13 acres, and the Marine-Hospital Service got 5 acres for the establishment of a laboratory, more for the investigations than anything else. We have only about 8 acres left, and we want to use that before it is gotten away from us entirely.

Evidently this property belongs to the Navy Department? There is now a naval museum there, and the provision in this bill is simply an addition to the present facilities of the Department for training young surgeons.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. It is a part of the establishment.

Mr. LESSLER. I want to say about the school of instruction, this is a supplement. They have that right there. The young officers or surgeons who come into the Navy are shown the requirements of the naval service, the filling out of reports, looking after the service, and are trained there from four months to a year. On page 6 there is one thing to which I forgot to call the attention of the Chair. Admiral Rixey goes into the question of the naval museum, its present location, the scope of its work, and all about it, if the Chair desires any further information on that.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman please send the report to the Chair?

Mr. LESSLER. Certainly.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard before the Chair rules.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman. The Chair is quite ready to rule unless the gentleman desires to be heard.

Mr. HEMENWAY. In reply to the statement that the hospital is necessary, a proposition comes from the Army for a hospital, and I see no reason why the Army and Navy should not have a hospital together. Why have two separate institutions? Why should they be maintained at a large expense to the Government? I can not understand any reason for it, and I make the point of order.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, did I understand the Chair to say that he is prepared to rule?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. But, if the Chair has already concluded——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is still open to argument.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Will the Chair permit me to ask another question?

The CHAIRMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. As to whether the Chair is sufficiently open to argument that anything I might say would change the mind of the Chair? [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Very possibly. If the Chair should rule at present, he would sustain the point of order. The Chair is ready to hear argument on the other side.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I do not think I have anything to say on the proposition. The burden would be greater than I should be able to assume, I think.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Chairman, I am not especially familiar with this matter myself, but I understand that the land on which the hospital is proposed to be built is land now owned by the Government, under the Navy Department. If that be the fact, and I think it is conceded, the rulings upon similar questions heretofore have been against the point of order. I can not put my hand on any decision just now, but I recall several instances where there was a question of similar character raised, and where it was settled that the land was owned by the Government, under the Navy Department, it was held that the construction of the building was merely the carrying out of the ordinary business of building up the Navy establishment, and that the language providing for its construction was within the purview of the exception in clause 2 of Rule XXI, which permits appropriations for "public works and objects already in progress" to be carried in general appropriation bills.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts). The decisions are undoubtedly contradictory upon appropriations for buildings upon Government land. The decisions which allowed buildings to be ordered at West Point and at Annapolis by an appropriation bill, it seems to the Chair, have gone to the verge of the law in that direction, and the gentleman who gave the elaborate decision allowing the erection of quarters at Annapolis indicated that he would rule in conformity with what he considered the more numerous precedents rather than as logic required. It seems to the Chair that the rule should not be further strained, and that unless this paragraph comes clearly within these decisions the point of order should be sustained.

In those cases the buildings were to carry out the direct purpose for which the land and buildings there were already being used. This proposition goes a step further, and, instead of being for the direct purpose for which the land is now used, diverts it to another purpose, for there is now no hospital there. It seems to the Chair like the case recently decided, where an appropriation for barracks at a navy-yard was ruled out of order, and like the case last year on this Navy appropriation bill, where an appropriation for a laboratory building at Annapolis was held subject to a point of order. The Chair thinks those precedents cover this case, and that logic is upon the same side, and therefore sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Building on land owned by the Government, Annapolis, Md.: Bureau of Steam Engineering: For a building to be used as an experiment station and testing laboratory in the department of marine engineering and naval construction (to cost not to exceed $250,000), $250,000. For the complete equipment of this building with all the necessary appliances and apparatus as an experiment station and testing laboratory, $150,000.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina offers the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 2, page 49, after the word "construction," the words "at the Naval Academy."

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to have this building to be erected for the Bureau of Steam Engineering as an experiment station and testing laboratory erected at the Naval Academy. I will state to the committee that this item carries an appropriation of $400,000, and since the building is to be erected at Annapolis, on ground owned by the Government, in my opinion it should be a part of the Naval Academy, and especially should this be the case since this committee has increased the limit of cost of the Naval Academy from $8,000,000 to $10,000,000.

Now, with this increase of $2,000,000, it seems to me that we ought to make this testing laboratory a part of the Naval Academy, and that its expense, $400,000, carried by this item, should be included in the total expense of the Naval Academy, the $10,000,000. And I will state that if this amendment is adopted, inserting the words—

At the Navy Academy—

In line 2, page 49, I shall then tender the following amendment:

Insert in line 6, page 49, after the word "dollars," the following: "In all, $400,000, which shall be included in the limit of expenditure for the Naval Academy."

With that explanation I hope the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MUDD] will not resist this amendment, since the expenditure for the Naval Academy has been so liberally increased.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that the House should take anything away from the Naval Academy that it has already unanimously given to it. It is true that the House has dealt very liberally with the Naval Academy, and that we have to-day increased the limit of cost of the necessary buildings there from $8,000,000 to $10,000,000; but I assure this House that the Secretary, and everyone connected with the Naval Academy who has presented any figures to us upon this subject-matter, are of the opinion that it will require every dollar that we have provided in that $10,000,000 for the construction of buildings that are essentially a part of that Academy as laid out and planned.

I do not believe that we can safely take back $400,000 out of the $10,000,000 that the House has already voted and divert it to the construction of a building which is not in any proper sense any part of the academy at all. I know that the training to which the building is to be devoted is a part of the general course of instruction in the Navy, but I think that anyone who will read the hearings on this matter will agree with me when I say that such training, such instruction is no part of the four years' course of studies marked out for the cadets before the entrance upon their service upon the sea. Now, furthermore, one word——

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Will the gentleman yield for one interruption?

Mr. MUDD. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Can the gentleman tell me what part of the buildings already planned have been contracted for—approximately?

Mr. MUDD. In round numbers, about $5,000,000.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. As I recollect the testimony, the only testimony as to the necessity for increasing this was to the effect that labor and materials had gone up something like 30 per cent, I believe.

Mr. MUDD. Not only that labor and materials have gone up, but as the committee thought it was better to continue the buildings yet to be erected of granite and not of brick.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. That is right, but I think the Secretary also stated that the fact of materials having gone up would only affect those buildings not yet contracted for.

Mr. MUDD. I apprehend that is true.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Which would be $3,000,000.

Mr. MUDD. I apprehend that is so.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. So 30 per cent on those remaining to be contracted for would not be a million dollars, which would allow a margin of more than $500,000, after completing this testing laboratory out of the $10,000,000.

Mr. MUDD. The increase in material, it should be said, will affect one very important building which is already contracted for. It will be seen in the hearings that the cadet quarters occupy a central position between the buildings which are already constructed, and will be the most important of all the buildings in the Academy. That building has been constructed of granite up to the first story, and we have just arrived at that point now where we can substitute granite for brick, and all of us agree, I think, that that is very desirable to do.

Mr. VANDIVER. Will my friend yield for a question?

Mr. MUDD. Yes.

Mr. VANDIVER. Is it not a fact that the original recommendation upon this testing laboratory was to the effect that it should be a part of the Naval Academy, located at Annapolis?

Mr. MUDD. No; never has been.

Mr. VANDIVER. I am quite sure it was so considered.

Mr. MUDD. And wrongly considered, and I will say to the gentleman from Missouri that so far was that from the fact that when it was proposed to put this in the bill last session, to come out of the $8,000,000, a point of order was made against it and it went out of the bill on the ground, if I recollect aright, that it was new legislation.

Mr. VANDIVER. I am aware of that.

Mr. MUDD. Now, I do not want to argue this further than to say it will be found from the itemized statement made by the Secretary of the Navy himself, and filed with the committee and printed in the hearings, that every single dollar of this $10,000,000 will be taken up in buildings other than this. If we take this $400,000 out of the $10,000,000, some of the buildings that are needful, that are authorized and already planned, possibly some contracted for, will have to be abandoned, and I hope this committee, sooner than take this out of the $10,000,000, will strike it out of the bill entirely. The fact of it is that this building is so far from being any essential part of the Naval Academy that at one time the gentleman will recall a proposition was made to insert the provision in the bill, making the appropriation and authorization, but left the location at the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. VANDIVER. Mr. Chairman, I remember quite well the discussion to which the gentleman from Maryland refers, and I remember also in that connection one of the reasons given for leaving it discretionary and not locating it specifically at Annapolis was, that if it were so done the amount would have to come out of the $8,000,000 then fixed as the limit of cost for the work for the Naval Academy, whereas it was desired by the gentleman and others that it should not come out of that. Therefore the plan was to leave it in a general way to be fixed afterwards by the Secretary of the Navy, with the expectation that he would settle upon Annapolis as the location for it.

Furthermore, I wish to say in my judgment the chief reason and the best reason that can be given for the establishment of this testing laboratory is that it is to furnish a sort of supplementary course, in the nature of a postgraduate course, for the instruction of naval cadets; and that being the case, it seems to me that it is quite important that it should be located at Annapolis. Furthermore, I am still of the opinion, if it is left in the discretion of the Navy Department to be located, to be settled after this appropriation is made, that it will be located at Annapolis.

Therefore now the only question is whether it shall be specifically located there, and the cost of it to come out of the $10,000,000 now fixed as the total limit, or whether it shall be left indefinite and the cost of $400,000 afterwards to be added to the $10,000,000. I do not wish to discuss the question as to whether or not the $10,000,000 is a sufficient amount; but in my humble judgment it is not only sufficient, but it is more than sufficient.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Will the gentleman from Missouri yield for a question?

Mr. VANDIVER. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. On page 7 of the hearings, No. 8, I find this:

The CHAIRMAN. Our next item is "Building at Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md., for Bureau of Steam Engineering: For a building to be used as an experiment station and testing laboratory."

Showing that it was in the draft of the bill as a part of the Naval Academy.

Mr. VANDIVER. It was in the draft of the bill and in the original recommendations, and I thank my friend from North Carolina for refreshing my memory as to that point in the hearings.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the section as an amendment to the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina. There seems to be a disagreement among the members of the committee themselves as to whether this amount was to be included in the amount of $10,000,000. It was my understanding it was to be included, or I should have made the point of order against it.

Now, the gentleman from Maryland states that if this item is included, other valuable buildings will have to be left out. In view of that fact, and in view of the fact that this limit has been fixed at $10,000,000, which is a very liberal appropriation for the Annapolis school and gives them a magnificent building, in view of the disagreement of this committee as to what this provision meant, I believe it ought to come within the $10,000,000, and if it is left to the Secretary of the Navy he may provide such buildings as he thinks are necessary, and if this building is necessary within the limit of ten millions the Secretary of the Navy has the right to construct it.

The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN] states that this building can be constructed within the limit of $10,000,000 and then $100,000 be left. If that is true, it does not require this provision to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to build this building. He can build it if he stays within the $10,000,000 limit. I think the members should vote to strike this provision out and keep the limit within the $10,000,000.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I have always thought that Congress has been disposed to be liberal in making appropriations for improvements at Annapolis. I remember when this House fixed the limit for these improvements four years ago, and when the Senate, in the same bill, increased that limit to $8,000,000. We have been informed by the highest authority connected with the Navy Department that these buildings can not be completed upon the plans laid down four years ago; that it will require an additional expenditure of $2,000,000 to complete the buildings on the designs and plans already made.

This is an additional building. If the appropriation of one hundred and fifty or two hundred and fifty thousand dollars should be taken from the appropriation of $10,000,000, it is as sure as anything can be calculated that the plans originally made for these improvements at Annapolis can not be carried out, and therefore I submit to the House that it would not be fair to reduce that appropriation of $10,000,000, specifically made for that purpose, according to the designs laid down by the Secretary of the Navy three or four years ago. It would ruin the plan to shorten that appropriation by taking from it one hundred and fifty or two hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. HULL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I should be delighted to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HULL. I would like to ask the gentleman if it is possible on this bill to limit the amount that could be paid to the architect for this additional amount. I understand the authorities have already agreed on 5 per cent of the $8,000,000, the plans already drawn up, and under that agreement, if no limitation is made here, the architect will get 5 per cent on this two millions as well. Is it possible to get a limit on this?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I wish I could answer the gentleman's question. I would be perfectly willing to vote in favor of a limitation upon the fees to be charged by the architect at Annapolis. I do not know whether the fees can be limited. I think, however, Mr. Chairman, the question of fees has always been left to the Secretary of the Navy. I am sure that he is well paid, however.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I am informed that the commission is usually settled through the customary charge of 5 to 10 per cent. Who is this architect at Annapolis?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I believe the architect is a New York architect, who bears the name of Flagg, spelled with two g's. I do not know his first name.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Where does he live?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I do not know. He is said to do business in New York. I wish to say, however, that he has a magnificent reputation, and there can be no exception taken to the man's designs or his work.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania think Congress can not limit the amount of fees to be paid to this architect when the Secretary himself can limit it? Can the Secretary of the Navy do something that Congress can not? The Secretary of the Navy can not do anything unless Congress authorizes or orders him to do it.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman will make his question a little more definite I will be glad to answer it. I suppose the Secretary has some discretionary power, but, of course, Congress has power supreme, and I suppose has the right to limit the fees of the architect.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I am informed that the architect of the work in and about the White House received a commission of 5 and 10 per cent on $600,000 or nearly $700,000.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I do not know anything about that; I was neither consulted nor informed.

Mr. DAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I hope the motion to strike this appropriation for this building out of the bill will not prevail. I hope the amendment will not be made to it making it a part and parcel of the Naval Academy appropriation for the simple reason that this building is not part and parcel of the Naval Academy establishment. When we passed the naval personnel bill and abolished the corps of engineers we took a step further in advance than any nation on earth in that direction. And if there be a weakness in the Navy to-day it is in the difficulty of preparing our officers to properly take care of the engineering department, the engineering work in the Navy.

This is not a building for the training of midshipmen. It is a building and an institution for the purpose of experimenting and testing all the many questions that spring up in marine engineering. It may be utilized for advanced study in marine engineering, but if that course is to be given it will be given to our officers after they have graduated from the Academy. This is simply in line with the school that has been established by the German nation, and which has been found to be of such great advantage to the German navy. In fact, I undertake to say that the German Empire would rather dispense with almost any other institution than its school of engineering at Charlottenburg.

This, as I have said, has nothing to do with the Naval Academy. It has been located at Annapolis by the committee for two reasons: First, because the Government has the land there; second, in order that the midshipmen there may have the benefit of observing the experiments that may be carried on there. Attendance upon such experiments will not be made incumbent on the midshipmen. If anyone is to be instructed there, it will be our engineer officers.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I am conscious of having made many mistakes in my life, but I am not conscious at this time of having ever made a greater mistake than when I assisted in abolishing the old time-honored and distinguished Engineer Corps of the Navy. Back in the Fifty-fifth Congress we made a determined effort, which was successful, when we amalgamated the line and the staff. By that action we took from the Navy what was, in my judgment, one of its most useful branches, the Engineering Corps. By the personnel act we required that all men who entered the Navy should become engineers as well as fighting men—known as line men. From what I can learn but few men care to become engineers. Most men prefer to perform line duties. From information which I regard as good and valuable I believe that this work has not been kept up to the high degree of efficiency which distinguished it when there was a distinct and separate corps, known as the Engineer Corps.

It is proposed by the establishment of this building at Annapolis to provide a distinct place for this instruction of all young men entering the Navy and enable them to comply with the provision of the act of Congress and become engineers—become efficient in the profession of engineering, so that hereafter when any of our great ships upon the sea require the services of men of engineering skill, any of these men may be able to lend the assistance which men trained in engineering can afford.

We considered in the Committee on Naval Affairs the importance of this building. It is a beginning, not of more buildings, but in my judgment the beginning of a policy under which the Navy Department will insist on requiring that all men entering the Navy shall become proficient in the art of engineering. I sincerely hope that the committee will sustain this provision. [Applause].

Mr. LESSLER. Mr. Chairman, probably the pleasantest thing in legislation is to be connected with great enterprises in which the country is of course interested. It is a fine thing to build battle ships, but the things that go to make up a battle ship and to raise up those who can man the battle ships consist of the planning and the hard work that is not done in the great open public life.

Mr. Chairman, we have heard a great deal about the German navy. I should be glad if I had the opportunity to give gentlemen here a complete idea of what that great school at Charlottenburg has done for the German navy. For instance, a year ago we made an appropriation of $20,000 for investigating liquid air. That was a separate appropriation. But if we had this engineering and testing school for our boys who are studying to build and man our Navy, those young men could be doing work for which we have heretofore made a specific appropriation.

Then there is again the great question, What is a good boiler? In building a battle ship we study to put in it boilers of the right capacity, and we investigate whether one method or another is best in the construction of those boilers. But matters like this would not be questions of mere speculation with the far-reaching Germans, nor will they be with our American naval officers when this school has been established—this adjunct to our Naval Academy.

When this institution for engineering education shall be established we shall have a corps of men capable of examining, testing, experimenting with our boilers, competent to go into questions of the strength of metals, the power of resistance, and everything of that sort necessary to be considered when we are building a great ship. Our young men trained in engineering will be competent to run every part of a battle ship and to understand thoroughly everything required for the running of the great engines that we are to build.

The great school in Germany is crowded with students coming from all parts of the world. To-day the great United States Government, when it wants service such as these trained men will be able to render, must go to some private institution or corporation and appeal to it to help out the great United States of America—this "ninety-billion-dollar country" with its 80,000,000 people: it must go to some private concern to find out whether a new boiler is proper to be introduced and used. When we shall have built this new school, this adjunct to the Naval Academy, we shall have our own Charlottenburg, and students from Europe will come to us in the United States of America to learn what a boiler or an engine should be.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, there is absolutely nothing in my motion that prevents the construction of this building. We have raised the limit for the construction of buildings at Annapolis to $10,000,000. The Secretary of the Navy under that limit can construct this building if he wants to. As stated by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN], he can construct this building and then have $100,000 left of the appropriation of $10,000,000.

It strikes me that if the gentlemen act in good faith, as I believe they desire to act in good faith, after this limit has been raised to $10,000,000, additional appropriations would not be run in here to the extent of $400,000. The Secretary of the Navy has complete power to construct this building if it is a part of the naval school down there and a part of the Naval Academy, and if what the gentleman from New York [Mr. LESSLER] says is true, and I have no doubt it is, and what the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] says is true, I have no doubt that the Secretary of the Navy will construct this building out of the $10,000,000.

Mr. LESSLER. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the gentleman if he has read our hearings on the question of additions to the Naval Academy?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I have not; but a member of the committee states on the floor here, and I have not heard the statement denied, that there is enough money to keep within this limit of $10,000,000 to construct this building and have $100,000 still left.

Mr. DAYTON. Oh, I do not think that is true.

Mr. HEMENWAY. He has made that statement.

Mr. LESSLER. I do not think the gentleman has made that statement.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I have no doubt the gentleman will confirm his statement.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit me, here is my statement. As I recollect the testimony before us it was that the reason they could not finish their plans within the $8,000,000 limitation was because there had been an increase in the cost of material and labor amounting to about 30 per cent, and that this would affect all the buildings that had not already been contracted for.

The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MUDD] made an estimate to me just now on the floor, that in his judgment $5,000,000 worth had been contracted, which would leave two and a half millions or three millions uncontracted for. There has been a contingency fund reserved, so that there will be two and a half millions more contracted, and 30 per cent on two and a half millions would be $750,000.

Mr. MUDD. Thirty per cent upon $3,000,000 is about right.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. That would be $900,000, which would leave over a million of dollars surplus.

Mr. MUDD. Something exceeding 30 per cent, it was generally stated.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Then, in place of having money enough to construct this and $100,000 left over, according to the statement of the gentleman from North Carolina, we would have a half million dollars left which the Secretary of the Navy could use.

Mr. DAYTON. Oh, no.

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Chairman, here is what the Secretary of the Navy says on the subject in regard to those $2,000,000:

> Now, as I understand it, you can take the original plan, without alterations, and in the light of conditions, as they exist to-day, taking into account what we have already exceeded the estimates, and taking into account what we are compelled to exceed them on account of the increase in cost of materials, it will take $2,000,000 over the limit to complete.

That is according to the plans which he then had, and this building was not included in those plans.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. That is right.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The gentlemen seem to be unable to agree on this matter.

Mr. MUDD. May I interrupt the gentleman a moment?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I yield.

Mr. MUDD. It is true there will be about $500,000 left, not contemplated and set aside for specific buildings, but it is to provide for a contingent fund which past experience has shown is almost as necessary as money for a specific building. The Secretary of the Navy asked for it, and there are contingencies arising from time to time that can not be foreseen.

Mr. HEMENWAY. That comes right back to the original proposition.

Mr. MUDD. If you want to eat up the contingent fund, you can do it.

Mr. HEMENWAY. That comes back to the original proposition, that there is $500,000 provided for in this limit of ten million more than the Secretary has plans and specifications to carry out.

Mr. MUDD. If we make the purchases of land as Congress has already authorized us to do, we will have to pay for that out of this $500,000.

Mr. HEMENWAY. And the construction of this building is only to cost $250,000.

Now, further than that, we have a Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds in this House. Is it right to come in here and provide for the construction of new buildings on an appropriation bill? I am free to say that if I had not understood that this building came within the limit of $10,000,000—and my information came from members of the committee—I should have made a point of order against it.

It has no business in this bill. It belongs with the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and it is vicious legislation; and when we put this kind of legislation upon an appropriation bill, we invite the gentlemen at the other end of the Capitol to violate the rules. We have been complaining here, when conference reports come back, that the rules of both House and Senate have been violated. We complained of that only a short time ago.

The time of Mr. HEMENWAY having expired, by unanimous consent it was extended three minutes.

Mr. HEMENWAY. We complained a few minutes ago, upon a conference report returned here by the gentleman at the head of the Committee on Military Affairs [Mr. HULL], that the rules of the House had been violated, that the rules of the Senate had been violated, and we refused to concur in a conference report and sent those gentlemen back to conference again; and are we going to follow up that action here in the House, within two hours after we have turned down a conference report for that reason, and put upon this bill an item for the construction of a new building, taking jurisdiction away from our Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and turning it over to the Committee on Naval Affairs?

If the House performs in that line, if we vote down the motion I have made to strike out this provision, how, then, are we going to contend, when the conference reports come back, that the Senate has violated the rules of the House and the rules of the Senate by putting items on an appropriation bill before they are authorized by legislation? The House can not afford to put itself in that position. Here, only two weeks before this session closes, when we shall have to fight these items from now on the balance of the session, we can not afford to put ourselves in the position of agreeing to this proposition and violating our own rules.

I sincerely hope that the House will take into consideration the far-reaching effect of this action, the effect it will have upon our action that is to follow, and that it will sustain my motion to strike this provision from the bill.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, in the first place, it has rarely, if ever, been the policy of Congress to provide for the building of Army and Navy structures through the intervention of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and the provision for this building is in exact accord with the history of legislative precedent.

But I think, Mr. Chairman, that for the last two weeks I must have been asleep and dreaming, for I have thought that within the last week or ten days an appropriation bill coming from the Committee on Appropriations, of which I think my friend from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY] is a member—not the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds—has carried on its face, and carried there by operation of a threatened rule, a provision for an immense extension of this great Capitol building, and for a magnificent and stupendous office building. [Applause.]

Mr. HEMENWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. With pleasure.

Mr. HEMENWAY. It was not in violation of the rules of the House, but in conformity with the rules of the House; and the rule was passed by a majority of the House voting for it, just as a majority of the House voted for a rule to extend this limit to $10,000,000; and the Committee on Naval Affairs ought to keep within that limit of $10,000,000 and not go beyond it.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. But should that legislation have come from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds?

Mr. HEMENWAY. It did not come from the Committee on Appropriations, and was not reported by that committee, and was only adopted after the rule had been passed by this House authorizing the chairman of the committee——

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I am only asking the gentleman for instruction.

Mr. HEMENWAY. If the gentleman will permit, I will instruct him by saying——

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Yes; I want to learn.

Mr. HEMENWAY. That the Committee on Appropriations did not report that item, and that it was not in the bill as reported from the Committee on Appropriations, and was only put in on the floor after a rule had been adopted by a majority of the members of the House authorizing the chairman to offer it.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. Did my friend object to it?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Why, certainly not; nor did I object to the rule that permitted the limit of cost on these Annapolis buildings to be raised to $10,000,000.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am very glad indeed to hear my friend admit that he is a member of the Committee on Appropriations. We do know that I was not dreaming, and that an appropriation bill from the Committee on Appropriations did provide for this business.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, I again insist that the gentleman has not yet been informed. The appropriation bill reported from that committee did not provide for it, and it was not reported from that committee.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. Well, then, let us get it this way, because I want it just the way the gentleman wants it.

Mr. HEMENWAY. No; you want it right.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. No; I want it your way.

Mr. HEMENWAY. You will get it right, then, when you get it my way.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. The bill was reported from the Committee on Appropriations, and then a member of this committee, ordinarily entirely without influence on this floor [laughter], the chairman of that committee [Mr. CANNON], proposed two amendments, which, I venture to say, produced a condition of paralysis in this House that it has not known for twenty-five years.

They all believed in the propriety of the amendment or motion of that chairman. But it was like a bolt out of a clear sky when it came from that source. Now, to say that it was put upon that bill upon the motion of a member of the committee after it came into the House is not at all to distinguish it from the position I first laid down. The fact is that a measure was passed with a vast appropriation for a building which was carried in another than a bill from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. The Secretary of the Navy——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DAYTON. I ask that the time of the gentleman may be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia asks that the time of the gentleman from Ohio may be extended for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I raised the point of order against those two buildings contained in those amendments, and the point of order was sustained by the Chair, and afterwards the gentleman was supplied in some way with a rule, which he immediately enforced. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Where did he get it?

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. I am glad to have that cumulative testimony. [Laughter.] I do not suppose it ever occurred to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations until the instant that the point of order was made that a rule would ever be needed.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. He certainly apprehended it would be needed, or he would not have had it on hand.

Mr. TAYLER of Ohio. I see I will have to blue print my humor. [Laughter.] Now, the Secretary of the Navy, who was for many years under the tutelage of the same chairman of the Committee on Appropriations here, obtained and justified his reputation for economic administration of public affairs and the economic expenditure of public money, and I know that no public duty relating to the expenditure of money has laid with greater gravity upon his conscience and judgment than this question of the increase in the amount that should be available for this great improvement at Annapolis.

He comes before the committee and presents through them to the House his statement, that I have confidence in—that I think every member of this House has confidence in—that the allowance of $10,000,000 for this improvement is less generous than the $8,000,000 was assumed to be when originally made. So much for that.

Now, this matter for the testing laboratory is entirely independent of the Naval Academy, and was intended originally to be independent of it. So far as Admiral Melville was concerned, and so far as anybody else connected with the Navy Department was concerned, it was immaterial where it was to be put. In the first instance it was thought it was to be put at some other place, but in the later consideration of it we thought it had better be at Annapolis. We have that situation.

The Secretary of the Navy insists upon the original plan as proposed. I do not mean the detailed plan, but the general plan, of the Naval Academy, requiring the expenditure to be fixed at not less than $10,000,000. That is an entirely different proposition from this provision that we have now under consideration. The amendment ought to be voted down. [Applause.] [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the motion of the gentleman from Indiana ought to prevail. We are face to face with this question, and it seems to me that if we insert "at the Naval Academy" and come within the limit, that this paragraph ought to remain. If gentlemen will read the testimony of the Department, they will believe this building ought to be erected. There may be some question as to whether it should be erected at a navy-yard or at the Academy, but there is no question that Congress ought to settle this matter if we are to have the building. Now, to adopt the motion of the gentleman from Indiana you will permit the Department to confine itself to the original plans and not construct this building.

Now, if you strike this paragraph out, I think you will be indicating your willingness to have this building not constructed. If you want this building constructed, and do not want to require it in connection with the Naval Academy nor to be included in the limit of expenditures for the Academy, why, then, keep this section just as it is. If you want it to go into that expenditure and be a part of the Naval Academy, then you ought, in my judgment, to vote down the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, and merely insert the words "at the Naval Academy." I will read what Admiral Melville said on this subject. The chairman said:

Where are you going to find the site for this at Annapolis?

Mr. MUDD. What page are you reading from?

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. This is on page 13, on steam engineering, speaking about this very building:

The CHAIRMAN. Where are you going to find the site for this at Annapolis?

Admiral MELVILLE. We have a site all laid out, right on the water. You can not bar us on that. It will perhaps require a little grading, and the material which they are now taking and dumping over there in the swamps would be just the thing. You remember where the steam building is; you go right out the front door of the steam building and you come to the little building where they generate the current for lighting the houses, and 50 yards from that you walk right into the water; that is about the location.

The CHAIRMAN. Do the Naval Academy people want it at the Naval Academy down there?

Admiral MELVILLE. Our friend, Captain Wainwright, is very much in favor of it. He told me that he was, and encouraged me; and Secretary Long was enthusiastic over it.

Mr. DAYTON. Is it not true that as they want it provided for it will be appropriated for as an independent provision, but not as a part of the $8,000,000 lump?

Admiral MELVILLE. That was the only opposition made to it; that is, they did not want this appropriation to come out of the building fund they have now—$8,000,000. At first we thought that we would be able to work that in with the $8,000,000, but as they wanted to make use of all that money and they could put up the buildings as they desired, they put it on me to get this out of Congress, and I want it and strongly recommend it.

So it seems to me that it ought to be at the Naval Academy, and ought to be a part of it, and it is for Congress to say whether they want it to come within the ten-million-dollar limit. If we want it to come within the $10,000,000, support the amendment I have offered, inserting "at the Naval Academy," for, as I have said, if this is adopted, I shall at once offer the other amendment requiring this building to be within the limit.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN].

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Chairman, does not the question come first on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana?

The CHAIRMAN. No; on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 54, noes 72.

So the amendment was lost.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The question was taken and the amendment was lost.

The Clerk read as follows:

The grades of the active list of the Navy hereinafter designated shall be so increased that there shall be 30 additional lieutenant-commanders, in all 200; 50 additional lieutenants, in all 350; such total numbers of lieutenants (junior grade) and ensigns as may qualify for said grades under existing law and the provisions of this act; 30 additional surgeons with the rank of lieutenant-commander, in all 85; 120 additional passed assistant and assistant surgeons, with the rank, respectively, of lieutenant and lieutenant (junior grade), in all 230; 2 additional pay inspectors, in all 15; 36 additional paymasters, in all 76; 26 additional passed assistant and assistant paymasters, in all 96; 29 additional naval constructors and assistant naval constructors, in all 75; 1 additional civil engineer, in all 28; and 12 assistant civil engineers, of whom 6 shall have the rank of lieutenant (junior grade) and 6 the rank of ensign: Provided, That assistant civil engineers, during the first five years after date of appointment, shall receive, per annum, when on duty, $1,500, when on leave or waiting orders, $1,000; during the second five years after such date, when on duty, $1,800, when on leave or waiting orders, $1,200; and after ten years from such date, when on duty, $2,100, and when on leave or waiting orders, $1,400; And provided further, That promotions in the corps of civil engineers shall be after such examination as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that from line 19, on page 54, to and including line 6, on page 59, ought to be treated as one paragraph.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, it all relates to the increase of the personnel of the Navy, and I ask that it be read and considered as one pargraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that it be considered as one paragraph. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill, and read to and including line 6, on page 59.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly the committee rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration House bill 17288, the naval appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

STATE OF MISSOURI, ss:

In testimony whereof I hereunto set my hand and affix the great seal of the State of Missouri. Done at the city of Jefferson this 14th day of February, A. D. 1903.

[SEAL.] SAM. B. COOK, Secretary of State.

STATE OF MISSOURI, SENATE CHAMBER,
City of Jefferson, February 13, 1903.

Hon. S. B. COOK, Secretary of State.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that the senate this day adopted the following resolution:

"Whereas decisions rendered by the Supreme Court of the United States during the past few years have divested the Interstate Commerce Commission of the authority which it exercised for a period of ten years after its organization in declaring what change should be made in an established rate of practice, found upon full investigation to be unjust or unreasonable, in order to bring it into conformity with the requirements of the 'Act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, have resulted in rendering said act practically inoperative to a large extent; and

"Whereas the general elimination of railway competition by means of the practical consolidation of more than three-fifths of the railway mileage of the country, which has taken place in the last three years, has brought the transportation service of the country under the absolute control of a few great capitalists and subjected the entire people to the imposition of such charges for transportation as the pecuniary interests of the capitalists may dictate, without any efficient governmental supervision or restraint: Therefore,

"Resolved, That the senate of the State of Missouri, the assembly concurring, does hereby respectfully petition Congress of the United States to speedily enact legislation investing the Interstate Commerce Commission with the authority mentioned in the foregoing preamble, which it formerly exercised, and also rendering the orders and rulings of the said Commission, made after full hearing of all parties in interest, immediately effective, so to continue until annulled by the courts under proper proceedings: Further,

"Resolved, That the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this State be hereby respectfully requested to use their best efforts, in every proper way, to secure the enactment of the legislation above outlined by the Congress at the earliest practicable date.

Mr. BERRY. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 7351) to authorize the Pennsylvania Railroad Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Allegheny River, in the State of Pennsylvania, to report it favorably with amendments.

Mr. PENROSE. That is a short bill, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The first amendment was, in section 2, page 2, line 15, before the word "this," to strike out "to" and insert "of;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That the bridge authorized to be constructed under this act shall be located and built under and subject to such requirements for the security of navigation of said river as the Secretary of War shall prescribe, and to secure that object the railroad company shall submit to the Secretary of War, for his examination and approval, a design and drawing of the bridge and a map of the location, giving for the space of 1 mile the depth and current of the river at all points and the location of any other bridge or bridges, together with all other information touching said bridge and river as may be deemed requisite by the Secretary of War to determine whether said bridge when built will conform to the provisions of this act and cause no serious obstruction to the navigation of the river or injuriously affect the flow of water.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 3, line 4, after the word "war," to insert "and any changes in said bridge which the Secretary of War may at any time deem necessary, and order in the interests of navigation, shall be made by the owners thereof at their own expense;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed, upon receiving said plan and map, and upon being satisfied that a bridge built on such plan and at said locality will conform to the provisions of this act and cause no serious obstruction to the navigation of the river or injuriously affect the flow of water, to notify the said company that he approves the same, and upon receiving such notification the said company may proceed to the erection of said bridge, conforming strictly to the approved plan and location; and should any change be made in the plan of the bridge during the progress of the work thereon or after completion such change shall be subject likewise to the approval of the Secretary of War, and any changes in said bridge which the Secretary of War may at any time deem necessary, and order in the interests of navigation, shall be made by the owners thereof at their own expense.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, page 3, line 10, after the word "railways," to strike out "of;" in line 12, after the word "postal-telegraph," to insert "and telephone;" and in the same line, after the word "purposes," to insert:

And equal privileges in the use of said bridge shall be granted to all telegraph and telephone companies: Provided, That all railroad companies desiring the use of said bridge shall have and be entitled to equal rights and privileges relative to the passage of railway trains over the same and over the approaches thereto upon the payment of reasonable compensation for such use; and in case the owner or owners of said bridge and the several railroad companies, or any one of them, desiring such use shall fail to agree upon the sum or sums to be paid and upon rules and conditions to which each shall conform in using said bridge, all matters in issue between them shall be decided by the Secretary of War upon the hearing of the allegations and proofs of the parties.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. That any bridge constructed under this act shall be a legal structure and shall be known as a post road, over which no higher charge shall be made for the transportation of mails, troops, and munitions of war, or other property of the United States than the rate per mile charged for their transportation over the railways and public highways leading to said bridge. The United States shall also have the right of way over said bridge for postal-telegraph and telephone purposes, and equal privileges in the use of said bridge shall be granted, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is not yet concluded.

Mr. QUAY. I hope the Senator will not press the motion now. The understanding was, I desire to say, that the morning business should be concluded before the motion was made.

Mr. CULLOM. There seemed to be no further morning business; but I will withhold the motion for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Concurrent and other resolutions are in order.

PROPOSED EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, several Senators have asked for the privilege of having little bills passed, and I wish to announce that I shall not make the motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business before 12 o'clock, but I shall make it at that time.

RESOLUTION PROPOSING VOTE ON STATEHOOD BILL.

Mr. QUAY. There is a resolution on the table which went over from yesterday to come up to-day. I ask that it may go over until to-morrow without prejudice to its place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.

HENRY P. MONTGOMERY.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask at this time to call up the bill (H. R. 6516) for the relief of Henry P. Montgomery, surviving executor of Granville Garnett, deceased.

I will state to the Senate that this is a bill remitting some twelve hundred and odd dollars to a citizen of Kentucky who, in 1862, went upon the bond of a neighbor, conditioned that his neighbor would keep the peace toward the United States. That neighbor afterwards joined the Confederate army and the bond was forfeited. The property of the surety was sold for that amount and covered into the Treasury. On the 4th day of November, 1864, upon a letter of the gentleman who was afterwards Attorney-General of the United States, Mr. Speed, of Kentucky, President Lincoln granted, or at least undertook to grant, a pardon. He made an indorsement upon that letter of the date of the 4th of November, 1864, as follows:

So far as it is legally competent for the President so to do, Mr. Garnett is hereby relieved in the case within named.

The court declined, upon the alleged informality of that action, to refund the money, and it was paid into the Treasury. The House passed the bill unanimously, refunding the amount to the executor of this man's estate. The committee of the Senate has unanimously reported the bill favorably. I now ask that the Senate bill be indefinitely postponed, and that the Senate will consider the bill (H. R. 6516) for the relief of Henry P. Montgomery, surviving executor of Granville Garnett, deceased, which is identical in language with the Senate bill.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to pay to Henry P. Montgomery, surviving executor of Granville Garnett, deceased, late of Owen County, State of Kentucky, $1,280.30, being a refund of the amount paid by Garnett to the United States, October 7, 1865, in satisfaction of a judgment of the United States circuit court for the district of Kentucky against him as surety on a peace bond of one W. G. Humber, which judgment had theretofore been remitted by the President of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill (S. 5940) for the relief of Henry P. Montgomery will be indefinitely postponed.

ELMER E. FORESHAY.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I introduced a resolution, which was considered day before yesterday, and on that day it went over, retaining its place, to follow the consideration of the resolution offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]. The resolution offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania was debated yesterday until the morning hour expired. I wish to know what has become of my resolution, which was to have been taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The RECORD rather indicates that unanimous consent was given that this resolution might lie on the table until the other was finally disposed of. Ordinarily, after the second morning, the Chair would order the resolution to go to the Calendar, but under the consent, as it appears in the RECORD, the Chair feels that the Senator has a right to have his resolution placed before the Senate now.

Mr. DUBOIS. That was my understanding.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will lay the resolution before the Senate.

Mr. CULLOM. If the resolution is to be discussed, I hope the Senator will not ask that it be taken up for consideration this morning.

Mr. DUBOIS. I do not feel justified in allowing the resolution to go over. I should like to have it disposed of. I am sure that the Senate will pass the resolution. I should not think that it would be discussed any more.

Mr. CULLOM. A few moments ago I desisted from making a motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business and announced that I would not make the motion until 12 o'clock. If the resolution goes through without consuming longer time than that, I have no objection to it, but a great many Senators here desire to have little bills passed, and I yielded especially for that purpose. Otherwise I have no objection to whatever may be considered.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], whom I do not see in the Chamber at this moment, desires, I know, to say something on this resolution; I think I myself probably do; and I would be very glad if the Senator from Idaho would allow it to go over in the absence of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. DUBOIS. I have no disposition to unduly press the resolution, but I think it ought to be voted upon by the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. I assure the Senator there is no desire to delay a vote upon it.

Mr. DUBOIS. I am quite willing that it shall go over, retaining its place on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then, by unanimous consent, the resolution goes over, retaining its place.

CLAIMS OF CITIZENS OF VIRGINIA.

Mr. MARTIN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9632) for the allowance of claims of certain citizens of Virginia for damages to their property incident to the encampment at Manassas and march from Camp Alger to Thoroughfare Gap, Virginia, as recommended by a board of officers appointed for the consideration of claims for damages to property by volunteer soldiers during the war with Spain.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF M. F. MERRITT, DECEASED.

Mr. WARREN. I ask the Senate to consider the bill (S. 5955) for the relief of the representatives of M. F. Merritt, deceased.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It provides that the claim of M. F. Merritt for further compensation for the construction of the light-draft monitor Cohoes may be submitted by his personal representatives, within six months after the passage of this act, to the Court of Claims, under and in compliance with the rules and regulations of the court; and the court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine and render judgment upon the same.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RUDOLF HERBST.

Mr. GIBSON. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 6681) for the relief of Rudolf Herbst.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It directs the accounting officers of the Treasury to reopen the claim of Rudolf Herbst as acting hospital steward of the United States Army and hospital steward of the First Montana Volunteer Infantry, and to allow him the pay, allowances, and extra pay of a hospital steward from August 18, 1898, the date of his appointment as such, to the date of the muster out of the First Montana Volunteer Infantry, less the pay, allowances, and extra pay received by him for that period.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PENSIONS TO REMARRIED WIDOWS.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12141) to amend an act entitled "An act amending section 4708 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in relation to pensions to remarried widows," approved March 3, 1901.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to amend section 4708 so as to read:

SEC. 4708. The remarriage of any widow, dependent mother, or dependent sister entitled to pension shall not bar her right to such pension to the date of her remarriage, whether an application therefor was filed before or after such marriage; but on the remarriage of any widow, dependent mother, or dependent sister having a pension such pension shall cease: Provided, however, That any widow who was the lawful wife of any officer or enlisted man or other person in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States, as described in paragraphs 1, 2, and 3 of section 4693 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, during the period of his service in any war, and whose name was placed or shall hereafter be placed on the pension roll because of her husband's death as the result of wound or injury received or disease contracted in such military or naval service, and whose name has been or shall hereafter be dropped from said pension roll by reason of her marriage to another person who has since died or shall hereafter die, or from whom she has been heretofore or shall be hereafter divorced, upon her own application and without fault on her part, and if she is without means of support other than her daily labor, as defined by the acts of June 27, 1890, and May 9, 1900, shall be entitled to have her name again placed on the pension roll at the rate now provided for widows by the acts of July 14, 1862, March 3, 1873, and March 19, 1886, such pension to commence from the date of the filing of her application in the Pension Bureau after the approval of this act: And provided further, That where such widow is already in receipt of a pension from the United States she shall not be entitled to restoration under this act: And provided further, That where the pension of said widow on her second or subsequent marriage has accrued to a helpless or idiotic child, or a child or children under the age of 16 years, she shall not be entitled to restoration under this act unless said helpless or idiotic child, or child or children under 16 years of age, be then a member or members of her family and cared for by her, and upon the restoration of said widow the payment of pension to said child or children shall cease.

Section 2 extends the provisions of this act to those widows otherwise entitled whose husbands died of wounds, injuries, or disease contracted during the period of their military or naval service, but who were deprived of pension under the act of March 3, 1865, because of their failure to draw any pension by reason of their remarriage.

Section 3 provides that no claim agent or other person shall be entitled to receive any compensation for services in making application for pension under this act.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to have the Senator from New Hampshire explain the provisions of the bill. How many new names will be placed on the pension roll by the bill, and what will be the expense to the Government?

Mr. GALLINGER. A single word will explain it, Mr. President. At the last Congress we passed an act restoring remarried widows to the pension roll, but in that act there was a slight omission; so that the widow of a master of a gunboat or a pilot, who ordinarily would have been included in the bill, was omitted because of a provision in a former statute.

The bill simply includes a very small class. There will be but a very few persons added to the roll; but the committee think that they are equally entitled to consideration with those who were pensioned under the act which was passed at the last Congress.

The House has passed the bill, and I have examined it with extreme care, as did our committee, and I feel sure that it ought to pass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TENNESSEE RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. PETTUS. I ask the indulgence of the Senate to consider presently the bill (H. R. 17052) to authorize the building of a railroad bridge across the Tennessee River at a point between Lewis Bluff, in Morgan County, Ala., and Guntersville, in Marshall County, Ala.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CULLOM submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16021) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

LIGHT-DRAFT MONITOR ETLAH.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 7002. Two bills have just been passed in almost the same language and for a similar purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill referred to by him; which will be read to the Senate in full for its information.

The Secretary read the bill (S. 7002) for the relief of the contractor or his legal representatives for the construction of the light-draft monitor Etlah; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes that the claim of the contractor or his legal representatives for the construction of the light-draft monitor Etlah may be submitted by the contractor or his legal representative within six months after the passage of this act to the Court of Claims, under and in compliance with the rules and regulations of that court, and that the court shall have jurisdiction, legal and equitable, to hear and determine and render judgment thereon; and provides the basis upon which the investigation of the claim shall be made.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for the third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HAMILTON M. SAILORS.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5070) for the relief of Hamilton M. Sailors.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay Hamilton M. Sailors, late Company K, One hundred and first Indiana Volunteers, the difference of pay and allowances between those of a private and those of a second lieutenant from May 26, 1863, to October 10, 1863, he having performed the duties of that office under proper appointment and assignment during that period.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT OF THE SABINE, TEXAS.

Mr. BAILEY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 3517.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, which will be read to the Senate in full for its information.

The Secretary read the bill (S. 3517) to amend the law creating the district of the Teche, Louisiana.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HANNA. I object, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio objects.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Is it in order to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill notwithstanding the objection?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. BAILEY. Then, Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill which has just been read in full to the Senate. The question is on that motion.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Texas to the fact that it has been substantially understood that the Senate is to go into executive session at 12 o'clock to-day.

Mr. BAILEY. I have no desire to interfere with that arrangement, but if I can have an understanding that this bill shall remain before the Senate and can be taken up to-morrow at any time, I shall be very glad.

Mr. CULLOM. The bill is before the Senate now.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to say to the Senator from Texas that there is no "arrangement" that the Senate shall go into executive session at 12 o'clock.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from Alabama advises me that there is no arrangement about going into executive session at 12 o'clock, and I will say to the Senator from Illinois that I think we can get through with the consideration of the bill by 12 o'clock, unless there be some unexpected debate.

Mr. CULLOM. Very well; go ahead. I am for the Senator's bill.

Mr. BAILEY. In order to conform to an agreement with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FOSTER] to take out of this bill all that part of it which relates to the State of Louisiana, I desire to propose certain amendments.

In the first place, on page 1, in section 1, line 3, after the word "of," I move to strike out the words "the Teche" and insert "Sabine;" so as to make it read "the district of Sabine;" and in line 4, beginning with the words "the States," I move to strike out down to and including the words "Gulf of Mexico," in line 9, and to insert "the State of Texas from the Sabine Pass."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, in section 1, line 3, after the words "district of," it is proposed to strike out "the Teche" and insert "Sabine;" and in line 4, after the words "part of," it is proposed to strike out:

The States of Louisiana and Texas commencing at the town of Plaquemine, in the parish of Iberville; thence down the western bank of the Mississippi River to the town of Donaldsonville, in the parish of Ascension; thence down the Bayou Lafourche and along its eastern bank to the Gulf of Mexico.

So as to read:

That the district of Sabine shall comprise all of the waters and shores of that part of the State of Texas from the Sabine Pass of Ascension; thence westerly along the coast of the Gulf of Mexico to the boundary line between Chambers and Jefferson counties, Texas; thence north and east with the west and north boundary line of said Jefferson County to the Neches River; thence up said river to the boundary line between Jasper and Angelina counties, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAILEY. On page 2, in section 1, line 2, after the word "thence," I move to strike out "west" and insert "east;" in line 4, after the words "Sabine River," to strike out "to a point due west from the town of Plaquemine, in the State of Louisiana, and thence;" in line 8, after the word "entry," to strike out "and Morgan City, Louisiana;" and in line 9, after the word "be," to insert "a," and change the word "subports" to "subport."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, section 1, line 2, after the word "thence," it is proposed to strike out "west" and insert "east;" in line 4, after the words "Sabine River," to strike out "to a point due west from the town of Plaquemine, in the State of Louisiana, and thence;" in line 8, after the word "entry," to strike out "and Morgan City, La.;" and in line 9, after the word "be," to insert the article "a" and to change the word "subports" to "subport;" so as to read:

Thence east with the north boundary lines of Jasper and Newton counties, Tex., to the Sabine River; thence down the Sabine River to the place of beginning; in which district Port Arthur, in the county of Jefferson, Tex., shall be the port of entry, and Sabine, Tex., shall be a subport of entry.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. May I inquire what is the bill which is under consideration?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A bill to establish a new customs district in the State of Texas.

Mr. BAILEY. I move to further amend, on page 2, section 2, line 10, by striking out the words "the Teche" and inserting "Sabine."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, in section 2, line 10, after the word "of," it is proposed to strike out "the Teche" and insert "Sabine;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That there shall be in the district of Sabine a collector, who shall reside at Port Arthur, Jefferson County, Tex.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further amendments as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. HANNA. Mr. President, I objected to the consideration of the bill for the simple reason that it had not received the indorsement of the Committee on Commerce, which committee has had this bill under consideration a number of times. I have no desire to interpose any objection to the further consideration of the bill, but I prefer to have it recommitted to the Committee on Commerce, so that the amendments which have been inserted in the bill may be considered by the committee.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I desire to say that if that motion prevails the bill may as well be abandoned.

In reply to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HANNA], I wish to say that this bill is a very simple one. Originally two States were concerned, but in its present amended form the bill omits the ports of Louisiana, at the request of the Louisiana Senators, and it now simply provides for a port of entry to accommodate certain commerce in the State of Texas.

The long delay before the Committee on Commerce was due to contests between rival and conflicting interests. A large investment has been made by certain New York capitalists at Sabine Pass, and another large investment has been made by Western capitalists at Port Arthur. As to the rivalries between those gentlemen I have no particular preference, but I do not believe that the rival ambitions of the respective towns ought to inconvenience the commerce of that section. In addition to the fact that the Senators from the State of Texas are earnestly in favor of this bill, the Secretary of the Treasury has strongly recommended its passage. Upon that statement I am willing to leave the question to the decision of the Senate.

Mr. HANNA. Mr. President, in regard to the limit of time within which this bill can be considered, I think the Senator is mistaken. The Committee on Commerce is to hold an adjourned meeting this afternoon to take up other matters, and if there is any additional information which can be brought before the committee as to this bill, either in regard to the amendments or in regard to the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury, it is only fair that the committee should have an opportunity to consider these subjects before the bill is finally acted upon by the Senate.

I am told that there has been additional information received, and because of that fact and of the fact that the committee have not reported the bill favorably, I think, as a member of that committee, I simply stand for the rights of the committee in insisting that they shall be allowed to consider any new matter that might change their opinion upon the subject.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator from Ohio be kind enough to tell me what the new matter is? If there is any new matter I am not aware of it; but if there is, and if it is sufficient to require further consideration, I will agree to the motion of the Senator.

Mr. HANNA. I refer to what the Senator mentioned—the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. BAILEY. That has been on file with the committee all the while.

Mr. HANNA. The letter to which the Senator referred has not come before the committee for consideration.

Mr. BAILEY. I know; but that is simply another letter affirming exactly what the Secretary of the Treasury said to the committee nine months ago.

Mr. HANNA. Very well. I simply insist on the reference in behalf of the committee, who have not reported on this bill.

Mr. BAILEY. They have reported adversely on it.

Mr. HANNA. Well; who have reported adversely on it.

Mr. CULLOM. If it is in order, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BAILEY. Let me say to the Senator from Illinois that he will expedite what he desires by allowing the fate of this bill to be decided. I want to have it out of my way. If I can not have the bill passed now, I want to know it. If it goes back to the committee, I want to abandon it, and I shall have nothing more to say about it.

Mr. CULLOM. I will yield for a few minutes for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HANNA] to recommit the bill to the Committee on Commerce. [Putting the question.] By the sound the "noes" have it.

Mr. HANNA. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HOAR. Let us have a division first.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 25, noes 24.

Mr. BAILEY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLAPP (when his name was called). On account of the absence of the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], with whom I have a general pair, I withhold my vote.

Mr. DEPEW (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY], who is absent; and, therefore, I withhold my vote.

Mr. NELSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]; but I transfer that pair to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MCLAURIN], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. QUARLES (when his name was called). I inquire whether the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that he has not voted.

Mr. QUARLES. I have a general pair with that Senator, and therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DUBOIS (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL]. I perceive that he has not voted, and therefore I withdraw my vote.

Mr. MCLAURIN of Mississippi. My colleague [Mr. MONEY] is unavoidably absent because of sickness. He is paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER]. If present, my colleague would vote "nay."

Mr. DOLLIVER. I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY], but on the statement of his colleague that if present he would vote "nay," on this question, I vote "nay."

Mr. DEPEW. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY] to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], and vote "yea."

Mr. DUBOIS. I inquire if I have a right to vote? I did not quite understand the statement of the Senator from New York.

Mr. DEPEW. I said that I transferred my pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY] to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL].

Mr. DUBOIS. That transfer of pairs leaves me at liberty to vote.

Mr. DEPEW. Yes.

Mr. DUBOIS. I vote "nay."

Mr. GIBSON (after having voted in the negative). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KEARNS] to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY], and will let my vote stand.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I have a general pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT]. If he were, here I should vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 32; as follows:

So the Senate refused to recommit the bill to the Committee on Commerce.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is still before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest to the Senator from Texas that he now allow the bill to go over, so that we may see it in printed form, and then it can be taken up to-morrow for consideration.

Mr. BAILEY. I am perfectly willing to do that. To get it out of the way, I accept that suggestion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. But that can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. ALDRICH. I hope there will be no objection from anybody to that course being pursued.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope that request will be granted.

Mr. BAILEY. I construed the suggestion into a request for unanimous consent. But I now make the request for unanimous consent that the bill may go over until to-morrow, and that it be printed in its amended form and come up in the morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That it be taken up for consideration in the morning hour?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes.

Mr. HOAR. I want to understand that request for unanimous consent. I suppose a bill taken up in the morning hour by unanimous consent requires unanimous consent clear through all of its stages; that is, if any Senator should object to this bill at any time that would stop it. Is that so?

Mr. ALDRICH. No; this bill has been taken up by a vote.

Mr. HOAR. Then I make no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas?

Mr. GALLINGER. I object, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire objects.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

Mr. CULLOM. I yield to the Senator from Texas for a statement.

Mr. BAILEY. I simply desire to say that I shall not interrupt the proceedings of the Senate at this point to insist upon the further consideration of this bill; but I give notice that to-morrow I will move that the Senate proceed to its consideration, if such a motion is necessary. Of that I am not advised.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will not be before the Senate for consideration to-morrow. It will go back to the Calendar.

Mr. ALDRICH. It will go back to the Calendar.

Mr. BAILEY. I will allow it to go back to the Calendar and will call it up to-morrow. Meanwhile, I ask that the bill be reprinted as it has been amended, so that Senators may have it before them in its amended form.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas asks that the bill be reprinted as already amended. Is there objection? The Chair hears no objection, and the order is made.

STATEHOOD BILL.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, I make my usual request that on Friday, the 27th of February, the vote be taken on what is known as the omnibus statehood bill and all amendments now pending or hereafter to be offered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that on Friday, the 27th day of February——

Mr. QUAY. At 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That on Friday, the 27th day of February, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, the vote be taken on the statehood bill, on all amendments then pending, and all amendments then offered, without further debate. Is there objection?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 17 minutes p. m.) the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.
